(ii) the spousal and equivalent-to-spouse amounts be increased to $6,055,

(iii) the supplementary personal amount be eliminated, and

(iv) the income threshold beyond which the spousal and equivalent-to-spouse amounts are reduced be increased to $606, and that these amounts be adjusted to reflect the portion of the annual increases in the Consumer Price Index in excess of 3 per cent.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 16, 1999: General income tax relief

The budget proposes three measures that provide general tax relief to Canadians:

- an extension to all taxpayers of the $500 supplements provided to low-income Canadians in the 1998 budget;

[10] Indexed by s. 117.1 after 1988.

[11] Indexed by s. 117.1 after 1999.

- a further increase in the personal amounts of $175 for all taxpayers; and
- the elimination of the 3-per-cent surtax for all those taxpayers whose surtax remained following action in the 1998 budget.

These measures will come into effect on July 1, 1999.

Increasing the amount of income that Canadians can receive tax-free

The income tax system currently provides a basic personal credit and spousal and equivalent-to-spouse ("spousal") credits to allow individuals and families to receive a basic amount of income on a tax-free basis. The amount used to establish the basic personal credit is $6,456 while the spousal credit amount is $5,380. The spousal credit amount is reduced on a dollar-for-dollar basis by income in excess of $538 of the dependant individual in respect of whom the credit is claimed. The federal credits are established at 17 per cent of these amounts.

Extending the $500 supplement

The 1998 budget provided a $500 supplement for low-income Canadians to each of the amounts used to determine basic personal and spousal tax credits. These supplementary amounts are phased out at a rate of 4 per cent of income in excess of $6,956. This budget extends to all taxpayers the tax relief provided by the $500 supplementary amounts by increasing the personal credit amounts by $500 and eliminating the supplements. The effect of applying this change as of July 1, 1999 is that, for 1999, most taxpayers will be entitled to one-half of the supplement that would be determined under the 1998 budget rules for 1999, plus $250. The proportionate benefit of this measure is the largest for those in the income range of about $8,000 to $20,000 in the case of single taxpayers.

Increasing the basic amounts by $175 for all taxpayers

This budget also proposes to increase these personal amounts by a further $175 effective July 1, 1999. Applying this change as of July 1, 1999 means that taxpayers will be entitled to one-half of the amount (rounded up to $88) for the 1999 tax year.

Once the two measures are fully implemented, all taxpayers will benefit from a basic personal amount of $7,131 — $675 higher than in 1997. The maximum amount for the spousal credit will also be increased by $675 to $6,055. The threshold at which the spousal credit amount begins to be reduced on a dollar-for-dollar basis by the income of the dependant will be increased from $538 to $606.

In combination, the 1998 and 1999 budget measures remove 600,000 Canadians from the tax rolls and provide tax reductions to all 15.7 million Canadian taxpayers. While these measures benefit all taxpayers, the greatest proportional benefits accrue to those with low incomes. For example, a typical single filer with $15,000 in employment income will pay 15 per cent less federal tax as a result of the general tax relief provided in the 1998 and 1999 budgets while a similar individual earning $30,000 will pay 6 per cent less tax. Typical families earning less than $30,000 will pay no net federal tax. A typical family with income of $30,000 has its federal income tax reduced by 110 per cent — that is, it becomes a net recipient of federal benefits as a result of the 1998 and 1999 budget actions. A typical family earning $40,000 will enjoy a 15 per cent reduction in federal income tax.

Proposed Amendment — Abandonment of 1996 Proposal re Seniors' Benefit

Department of Finance news release, July 28, 1998: Finance Minister's Statement on the Seniors Benefit

[The March 6, 1996 Budget Papers had proposed a non-taxable Seniors Benefit, to be introduced in 2001 and linked to income. The age credit in 118(2) and pension income credit in 118(3) would have been eliminated with the introduction of the Seniors Benefit — ed.]

Finance Minister Paul Martin today issued the following statement regarding Canada's retirement income system: ....

"Second, we proposed the restructuring of the OAS/GIS [Old Age Security/Guaranteed Income Supplement] into a new integrated Seniors Benefit. It is this proposal that I wish to discuss this morning....

"Therefore, in light of the structural enhancements to the public pension system, the turnaround in the country's economic prospects, and because of our commitment to sound fiscal management, the government is today announcing that the proposed Seniors Benefit will not proceed. The existing OAS/GIS system will be fully maintained...."

Department of Finance news release, June 3, 1999: Clarifying Changes to Tax Rules Announced for Donations of Ecologically Sensitive Land

Finance Minister Paul Martin today announced technical changes to the income tax rules applying to the donation of a servitude, covenant or easement in respect of ecologically sensitive land. The changes clarify the manner in which capital gains and losses on the disposition of the property that is the subject of a charitable gift are to be calculated.

The tax credit or deduction allowed to a donor upon making such a gift should be based on the gift's fair market value. However, the fair market value is often difficult to determine since there is no established market for easements, covenants or servitudes. Accordingly, a 1997 budget measure provided that the fair market value of such a gift be considered to be no less than the decrease in the fair market value of the related land as a result of the gift. The 1997 amendment did not, however, explicitly set out how to determine the cost of the related land that is allocable to the gift for the purpose of calculating any gain or loss that may arise on its disposition. The amendments announced today clarify how this allocation is to be made.

These amendments also clarify that the rules that apply in determining the value of an ecological gift would also apply in determining the donor's proceeds of disposition for calculating a capital gain or loss. Further, where there would be a capital gain, these amendments allow the donor to report a lesser gain and claim a correspondingly lesser charitable donations tax credit or deduction.

"Protection of Canada's environmental heritage is a responsibility for all Canadians," Minister Martin said. "Through the provision of tax incentives, the Government of Canada is encouraging private landowners to preserve this heritage on a voluntary basis."

Attached are the draft amendments to the Income Tax Act and a background note providing more details about how the rules apply. These amendments are proposed to apply to gifts made after February 27, 1995, the date on which these measures first became effective.

BACKGROUNDER

The 1995 budget announced enhanced incentives for the donation of ecologically sensitive land to the Government of Canada, a provincial government, a Canadian municipality or an approved registered charity established for the purpose of protecting Canada's environmental heritage. Donations from individuals are eligible for the charitable donations tax credit, while those from corporations are eligible for a deduction from income. Besides transfers of title, landowners are able to donate covenants, easements and servitudes established under common law, the Civil Code in Quebec, or particular provincial or territorial legislation allowing for their establishment.

Normally, the value of a donated property is determined to be the price that a purchaser would pay for the property on the open market. As there is no established market for covenants, easements and servitudes, the fair market value of such restrictions on land use is difficult to determine. To provide greater certainty in making these valuations, the 1997 budget introduced a measure to deem the value of these gifts to be not less than the resulting decrease in the value of the land. That measure was implemented with application to gifts made after February 27, 1995.

Like other capital property, the value of a covenant, easement or servitude is also relevant in calculating the capital gain or loss that may arise on disposition. To provide taxpayers greater certainty in making this calculation, the amendments announced today will ensure that:

- a reasonable portion of the adjusted cost base of the land is to be allocated to the donated covenant, easement or servitude; and
- the proceeds of disposition for capital gains purposes are equal to the amount deemed for the purpose of the claim of a charitable donation deduction or credit.

For this purpose, an allocation of the adjusted cost base of the land to the gift, in proportion to the percentage decrease in the value of the land as a result of the donation, will be accepted as a reasonable allocation.

A provision is also added to provide a donor with the option of reporting a reduced amount of capital gain, provided that the value of the gift for the purposes of the charitable donations tax credit or deduction is reduced accordingly.

Related Provisions: 43(2) — Calculation for 118.1(12) also applies for determining capital gain or loss on disposition; 110.1(5) — Parallel rule for donation deduction for corporations.

(a) except for the purpose of applying subsection (6) to determine the individual's proceeds of disposition of the security, the gift is deemed not to have been made;

(b) if the security ceases to be a non-qualifying security of the individual at a subsequent time that is within 60 months after the particular time and the donee has not disposed of the security at or before the subsequent time, the individual is deemed to have made a gift to the donee of property at the subsequent time and the fair market value of that gift is deemed to be the lesser of the fair market value of the security at the subsequent time and the amount of the gift made at the particular time that would, but for this subsection, have been included in the individual's total charitable gifts or total Crown gifts for a taxation year;

(c) if the security is disposed of by the donee within 60 months after the particular time and paragraph (b) does not apply to the security, the individual is deemed to have made a gift to the donee of property at the time of the disposition and the fair market value of that gift is deemed to be the lesser of the fair market value of any consideration (other than a non-qualifying security of the individual or a property that would be a non-qualifying security of the individual if the individual were alive at that time) received by the donee for the disposition and the amount of the gift made at the particular time that would, but for this subsection, have been included in the individual's total charitable gifts or total Crown gifts for a taxation year; and

(d) a designation under subsection (6) or 110.1(3) in respect of the gift made at the particular time may be made in the individual's return of income for the year that includes the subsequent time referred to in paragraph (b) or the time of the disposition referred to in paragraph (c).

Proposed Addition — Qualifying Medical Expenses

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 16, 1999: Medical expense tax credit

(14) That, for the 1999 and subsequent taxation years, there be added to the list of expenses eligible for the medical expense tax credit

(a) remuneration paid for the care, or supervision, in a group home in Canada of an individual in respect of whom the disability tax credit may be claimed, where the home is maintained exclusively for the benefit of individuals who have a severe and prolonged impairment,

(b) remuneration paid for therapy administered to an individual in respect of whom the disability tax credit may be claimed if

(i) the therapy is prescribed by, and administered under the general supervision of,

(A) a medical doctor or a psychologist, in the case of a mental impairment, and

(B) a medical doctor or an occupational therapist, in the case of a physical impairment, and

(ii) the payee is neither the payor's spouse nor under 18 years of age, and

(c) remuneration paid for tutoring services that are rendered to, and are supplementary to the primary education of, an individual who

(i) has a learning disability or a mental impairment, and

(ii) has been certified by a medical practitioner to be a person who, because of that disability or impairment, requires those services, where the payee is ordinarily engaged in the business of providing such services to persons unrelated to the payee.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 16, 1999: Medical expense tax credit (METC) — persons with disabilities

The government is committed to continue helping Canadians with disabilities by building on the significant level of tax assistance that is already available. In the last two years, a number of tax relief measures were introduced to better recognize disability-related costs. These included the introduction of a tax credit for caregivers, a refundable tax credit for low-income earners with high medical expenses, and the addition of new expenses eligible for relief under the METC. These measures have provided significant additional tax assistance for persons with disabilities.

The METC recognizes the burden of above-average medical expenses by providing tax relief for eligible medical expenses. For 1999, the METC reduces the federal tax of a claimant by 17 per cent of qualifying unreimbursed medical expenses in excess of the lesser of 3 per cent of net income and $1,614.

The budget proposes to further improve tax assistance for the care and education of persons with disabilities by extending the METC to expenses in respect of the remuneration for:

- the care and supervision of persons with severe and prolonged disabilities living in a group home;
- therapy for persons with severe and prolonged disabilities; and
- tutoring for persons with learning disabilities (or other mental impairments).

The budget also proposes to expand the list of eligible equipment for persons with disabilities.

These measures will apply to the 1999 and subsequent taxation years.

Persons with disabilities living in a group home

Group homes are often established within communities for persons with severe mental and physical disabilities. This budget extends tax relief under the METC to include amounts paid on account of remuneration for persons providing care and supervision in a group home for those with severe mental or physical disabilities who are eligible for the disability tax credit (DTC).

Therapy for persons with disabilities

The METC currently provides tax relief for amounts paid to a qualified therapist or other medical practitioner for therapy. However, there are medical therapies that may be prescribed that do not require a qualified therapist or medical practitioner to administer. This measure provides tax relief for amounts paid for therapies administered by a person other than a qualified therapist or medical practitioner to persons with a severe and prolonged mental or physical disability. This measure will be available only in respect of an individual who is eligible for the DTC. The therapy must be prescribed by, and administered under the general supervision of, a medical doctor (or a psychologist in the case of a mental disability or an occupational therapist in the case of a physical disability).

Tutoring for persons with learning disabilities (or other mental impairments)

While tax assistance is already provided for education, individuals with learning disabilities may have a need for supplementary educational services. This budget provides tax relief for amounts paid on account of remuneration for such tutoring services for persons with learning disabilities (or other mental impairments). The need for tutoring services, because of a learning disability, must be certified by a medical practitioner.

Expanding the list of eligible equipment for persons with disabilities

The Income Tax Regulations contain a list of medical devices and equipment eligible for tax relief under the METC. This list will be expanded to include talking textbooks prescribed by a medical practitioner in connection with an individual's enrolment at an educational institution in Canada, where the individual has a perceptual disability.

(c) determine the amount (in this section referred to as the "average net income") for each year in the averaging period equal to the average gross income minus the deductions permitted for that year by section 109 of the Income Tax Act, chapter 148 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952,

(d) determine the amount (in this section referred to as the "average tax") for each year in the averaging period equal to the tax that would be payable under this Part for the year if the taxable income for the year were the average net income for the year and no amount were deductible under subsection 127(5) for the year,

Proposed Amendment — 119

119. Former resident — credit for tax paid — If at any particular time an individual (other than a trust) was deemed by subsection 128.1(4) to have disposed of a capital property that was a taxable Canadian property of the individual throughout the period that began at the particular time and that ends at the first time, after the particular time, at which the individual disposes of the property, there may be deducted in computing the individual's tax payable under this Part for the taxation year that includes the particular time the lesser of

(a) that proportion of the individual's tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part (within the meaning assigned by paragraph (a) of the definition "tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part" in subsection 126(7)) that

(i) the individual's taxable capital gain from the disposition of the property at the particular time

(ii) the amount determined under paragraph 114(a) in respect of the individual for the year, and

(b) that proportion of the individual's tax payable under Part XIII in respect of dividends received during the period by the individual in respect of the property and amounts deemed under Part XIII to have been paid during the period to the individual as dividends from corporations resident in Canada, to the extent that the amounts can reasonably be considered to relate to the property, that

(i) the amount by which the individual's loss from the disposition of the property at the end of the period is reduced by subsection 40(3.7)

is of

(ii) the total amount of those dividends.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 13, will amend s. 119 to read as above, applicable to dispositions after December 23, 1998 by individuals who ceased to be resident in Canada after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: New section 119 of the Act provides a special tax credit in certain cases where the "stop-loss" rule in new subsection 40(3.7) of the Act applies to an individual (other than a trust) who ceased to be resident in Canada.

Under amended subsection 128.1 of the Act, individuals who emigrate from Canada are treated as having disposed of most properties, for proceeds equal to the properties' fair market value. Such an individual may therefore be treated as having realized an accrued gain immediately before leaving Canada, and will be subject to tax on the gain. If the individual subsequently receives dividends in respect of the same property, a loss realized on a later disposition of the property may be reduced by new subsection 40(3.7), and thus may not be available to offset the gain that resulted from the subsection 128.1(4) deemed disposition. Part or all of the tax liability arising from the gain would thus remain payable. However, the individual may also have paid tax on those post-departure dividends, under Part XIII of the Act.

New section 119 addresses this possible overlap between the tax resulting from the subsection 128.1(4) deemed disposition of a capital property and the Part XIII tax on dividends that reduce the taxpayer's loss on the property. In general terms, the rule allows a tax credit equal to the tax on those dividends, up to the amount of the tax on the capital gain that arose on emigration from Canada.

More specifically, section 119 allows the individual to deduct, in computing tax otherwise payable under Part I for the taxation year in which subsection 128.1(4) treated the individual as having disposed of the property, the lesser of two amounts. The first amount, described in paragraph 119(a), is in effect the amount of tax attributable to the gain on the property. This amount is computed as the proportion of the individual's Part I tax for that year that the taxable capital gain on the particular property is of the individual's total income for the year, as determined under new paragraph 114(1)(a) [actually 114(a) — ed.] of the Act.

The second amount, set out in paragraph 119(b), is the Part XIII withholding tax paid (or deemed to have been paid) by the individual on dividends that, under new subsection 40(3.7), have reduced the individual's loss from the disposition of the property. This amount is computed as the proportion of the individual's Part XIII tax in respect of dividends in respect of the property that the subsection 40(3.7) loss reduction is of the total amount of those dividends.

A consequential amendment to subsection 152(6) of the Act ensures that any necessary assessments of tax will be made in order to take account of the effect of new section 119.

120. (1) Income not earned in a province — There shall be added to the tax otherwise payable under this Part by an individual for a taxation year an amount that bears the same relation to 52% of the tax otherwise payable under this Part by the individual for the year that

(a) the individual's income for the year, other than the individual's income earned in the year in a province, bears to

(b) the individual's income for the year.

(2) Amount deemed paid in prescribed manner — Each individual is deemed to have paid, in prescribed manner and on prescribed dates, on account of the individual's tax under this Part for a taxation year an amount that bears the same relation to 3% of the tax otherwise payable under this Part by the individual for the year that

(a) the individual's income earned in the year in a province that, on January 1, 1973, was a province providing schooling allowances within the meaning of the Youth Allowances Act, chapter Y-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970,

Proposed Addition — 120(2.2)

(2.2) Amount deemed paid — An individual is deemed to have paid on the last day of a taxation year, on account of the individual's tax under this Part for the year, an amount equal to the individual's tax payable for the year to an aboriginal government pursuant to a legislation of that government made in accordance with the terms and conditions of a tax sharing agreement between that government and the Government of Canada.

Application: The December 2, 1998 Notice of Ways and Means will add subsec. 120(2.2), applicable to 1999 et seq.

Technical Notes: The purpose of the proposed amendment is to provide a federal tax reduction to the extent that personal income tax is imposed by a First Nation government. In order to both facilitate the exercise of taxation powers by agreeing First Nations and ensure that individuals are not subject to an increased tax burden in such circumstances, the federal government, through the amendment, cedes tax room by granting a credit equal to a portion of the federal income tax otherwise payable.

This proposed amendment, which would become effective January 1, 1999, would reduce an individual's federal tax liability by the amount of income tax that individual pays to a First Nation that has entered into a tax sharing agreement with the government of Canada. It would also ensure that the tax burden of an individual subject to First Nation taxation is the same as the tax burden in surrounding jurisdictions.

The federal government is pursuing tax co-ordination discussions with seven self-governing First Nations in the Yukon. Under the terms of the self-government agreements, these First Nations may enact legislation to levy an income tax on their citizens and, through agreement with the federal government, non-citizens residing on their settlement lands.

Department of Finance news release, December 2, 1998: Technical Amendment Proposed to Help Implement Taxation Agreements With First Nations

Secretary of State (International Financial Institutions) Jim Peterson today tabled in the House of Commons, on behalf of Finance Minister Paul Martin, a Notice of Ways and Means Motion to amend the Income Tax Act to provide for a reduction of federal income tax for individuals who are subject to the income tax legislation of certain First Nations.

The proposed amendment will be required to implement income tax collection and sharing agreements between the federal government and agreeing First Nations. The proposed amendment confirms the government's willingness, as reiterated in the 1998 Budget, to put into effect taxation arrangements with First Nations that indicate an interest in exercising taxation powers.

The effect of the proposed amendment is to permit individuals to reduce their federal income tax to the extent of the amount of income tax payable to a First Nation, where that First Nation has entered into a tax sharing agreement with the federal government.

It is proposed that this amendment become effective January 1, 1999.

Related Provisions: 81(1)(a) — Deduction for amounts exempted under Indian Act.

(3) Definition of "the individual's income for the year" — In subsections (1) and (2), "the individual's income for the year" means

(a) in the case of an individual to whom section 114 applies who was resident in Canada during part of the year and during some other part of the year was not resident in Canada, the amount that would be determined under that section to be the individual's taxable income for the year if that section were read without reference to the words following paragraph 114(b); and

(b) in the case of an individual to whom section 115 applies who was not resident in Canada at any time in the taxation year, the amount that would be determined under Division D to be the individual's taxable income for the year if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to the words following paragraph 115(1)(c).

Proposed Amendment — 120(3)

(3) Definition of "individual's income for the year" — In subsections (1) and (2), an "individual's income for the year" means

(a) if section 114 applies to the individual in respect of the year, the amount determined under paragraph 114(a) in respect of the individual for the year; and

(b) if the individual was non-resident throughout the year, the individual's taxable income earned in Canada for the year determined without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f).

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 14(1), will amend subsec. 120(3) to read as above, applicable to 1997 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 120 of the Act sets out rules that integrate the federal and provincial income tax systems for individuals. Subsection 120(1) imposes an additional amount of federal tax on income that is not subject to provincial or territorial tax, while subsection 120(2) provides part of the tax abatement for income earned in Quebec (the rest is found in legislation concerning federal-provincial fiscal arrangements).

For the purposes of subsections 120(1) and (2) of the Act, subsection 120(3) defines the phrase "the individual's income for the year" where sections 114 or 115 of the Act — dealing with part-year residents and non-residents, respectively — apply in respect of the individual for the year. Subsection 120(3) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment makes no substantive change, but keeps the reference in step with the changes to section 114. Readers may refer to the notes on section 114 for more details.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 15, will amend para. 122.3(1)(e) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Section 122.3 of the Act provides a tax credit to Canadian residents who are employed outside Canada by a specified employer for at least six months in connection with resource, construction, installation, agricultural or engineering contracts or for the purpose of obtaining those contracts. This credit — commonly known as the Overseas Employment Tax Credit (OETC) — effectively eliminates 80% of the Canadian tax arising on the first $100,000 of salary or wages earned from such foreign employment.

The OETC is determined by multiplying an employee's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction: the numerator of that fraction, determined under paragraphs 122.3(c) and (d) of the Act, generally consists of the lesser of $80,000 and 80% of the individual's overseas employment income for the year; the denominator, determined under paragraph 122.3(1)(e), is the individual's income for the year (or, where section 114 of the Act applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the individual is resident in Canada) reduced by certain deductions listed in subparagraph 122.3(1)(e)(iii).

Paragraph 122.3(1)(e) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment makes no substantive change, but keeps the reference in step with the changes to section 114. Readers may refer to the notes on section 114 for more details.

Proposed Amendment — Extension of Definition of Manufacturing or Processing

Notice of Ways and Means Motion, federal budget, February 16, 1999: M&P rate for electrical generating sector

(16) That, for the purpose only of applying the manufacturing and processing profits tax rate reduction in section 125.1 of the Act for the 1999 and subsequent taxation years, the producing or processing of electrical energy, or steam, for sale be considered manufacturing or processing except that, in its application to profits from such activity, the reference to 7% in that section be read as 1% for 1999, 3% for 2000, and 5% for 2001, pro-rated for taxation years that straddle a calendar year end.

Federal budget, supplementary information, February 16, 1999: Manufacturing and processing (M&P) tax rate reduction extended to electricity generating sector

Since 1972, the federal government has provided a tax credit to reduce the top rate of corporate tax applicable to manufacturing and processing profits earned in Canada.

The definition of manufacturing and processing specifically excludes the production or processing of electrical energy or steam, for sale. In the early 1970s the production of electrical energy for sale was carried on generally by Crown corporations. Furthermore, electricity markets were highly regulated and there were relatively few sales in Canada of imported electricity.

The M&P tax credit is currently 7 per cent, thereby reducing the federal corporate tax rate on profit from such activity from 28 per cent to 21 per cent. The credit does not apply to income which already benefits from the low 12 per cent rate applied to the first $200,000 of active business income of Canadian-controlled private corporations. At least 10 per cent of a corporation's gross revenue must be derived from manufacturing and processing activities in Canada in order for any of the corporation's profits to be eligible for the credit.

The electricity generating industry is currently undergoing significant change and restructuring throughout North America. Privatization is an important part of the restructuring, and taxpaying corporations will become more important participants. While the pace of change varies considerably among jurisdictions, the general direction of restructuring is to transform electricity markets from regulated markets to more competitive ones. The Canadian electricity supply sector is a major component of the overall energy system in North America, and Canada is becoming increasingly integrated with the U.S. market. These developments have put increased competitive pressure on Canadian producers of electricity.

The production or processing of electrical energy or steam used directly or indirectly by a taxpayer in a manufacturing process is generally eligible for the M&P tax credit. Thus companies that generate electricity for their own use may already benefit from the lower M&P tax rate.

This budget proposes to extend the M&P tax credit to corporations that produce electrical energy or steam for sale. Access to the credit would be phased in beginning January 1, 1999, with a one percentage point reduction. In each of the three subsequent years there will be additional two percentage point reductions. The full seven percentage point phase-in will be completed in 2002. These rate reductions will be pro-rated for taxation years that straddle calendar years.

"unused Part I.3 tax credit" of a corporation for a taxation year means the amount, if any, by which the corporation's tax payable under Part I.3 for the year exceeds the amount deductible under subsection (1) in computing its tax payable under this Part for the year.

Forms: T2 SCH 37: Calculation of unused Part I.3 tax credit and unused surtax credit.

Pre-RSC History [s. 125.3]: S. 125.3 added by 1990, c. 39, s. 29, applicable (by subsec. 29(2), as amended by 1991, c. 49, s. 254) to taxation years ending after June 1989 except that, in its application to a taxation year of a corporation commencing before July 1989, the definition "Canadian surtax payable" in subsec. 125.3(4) shall be read as follows:

"Canadian surtax payable" of a corporation for a taxation year means that proportion of

(a) in the case of a corporation that is throughout the year not resident in Canada, the amount determined under section 123.2 in respect of the corporation for the year, and that the number of days in the year that are after June 1989 is of the number of days in the year;

(b) in any other case, the prescribed proportion of the amount determined under section 123.2 in respect of the corporation for the year

The amendment ensures that the definition applies without reference to the new surtax credit provided under Part I.3 (see subsec. 181.1(4)). In other words, Part I.3 liability, for purposes of calculating the amount of any excess of that liability over Canadian surtax payable, is determined before accounting for the reduction of Part I.3 tax by the new surtax credit.

Technical Notes: Section 126 of the Act provides rules under which taxpayers may deduct, from tax otherwise payable, amounts they have paid in respect of foreign taxes. The present amendments introduce three sorts of changes to these "foreign tax credit" rules. Most importantly, a new foreign tax credit is introduced for non-resident individuals who were formerly resident in Canada. This new credit, along with a comparable credit for non-resident beneficiaries of trusts that are resident in Canada, is found in new subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22).

Second, the existing foreign tax credit for non-residents of Canada, in subsection 126(2.2), is modified to reflect changes to the rules that apply to emigrant taxpayers under subsection 128.1(4) of the Act.

Third, several of the provisions in section 126 are modified to take account of changes to section 114 of the Act.

All of these changes are described in detail in the following notes.

Subsection 126(1) of the Act provides a tax credit in respect of foreign non-business income tax — that is, foreign taxes levied on investment and other non-business income. The credit is determined by multiplying the taxpayer's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction: the numerator of that fraction, determined under 126(1)(b)(i), consists of the taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) from sources in the particular country calculated on certain assumptions; the denominator of that fraction, determined under paragraph 126(1)(b)(ii), consists generally of the amount by which the taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) exceeds the deductions listed in subclause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)(III).

Clause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114 of the Act. The amendment removes a reference in subclause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)(I) to section 114, updates the reference to that section in the following subclause, and simplifies subclause 126(1)(b)(ii)(A)(III)'s reference to the taxpayer's taxable income for the year. These changes keeps the provision in step with the changes to section 114. Readers may refer to the notes on section 114 for more details.

(B) the amount, if any, added under section 110.5 in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the year.

Proposed Amendment — Authorized foreign bank

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (authorized foreign banks), February 11, 1999: (7) That, subject to the general limits imposed under section 126 of the Act, an authorized foreign bank be entitled to deduct, in computing its tax payable under Part I of the Act for a taxation year, an amount in respect of withholding taxes imposed by the government of a foreign country or of a political subdivision of that country, provided that

(a) the bank was not, at any time in the year, resident in that country, and

(b) the taxes were withheld in respect of income for the year from a business carried on by the bank in Canada, to the extent that the amount does not exceed the tax that would otherwise be payable on that income under Part I of the Act.

Department of Finance news release, February 11, 1999: Foreign Tax Credit

Canadian banks may claim, in computing their Canadian income tax payable, a credit in respect of taxes paid to a foreign government on income subject to tax in Canada. It is not considered appropriate to give identical treatment to foreign banks, because taxes payable to Canada in respect of a business carried on in Canada should have priority over taxes that are paid to a government in a foreign bank's home jurisdiction.

However, a foreign bank may also pay withholding tax to the government of a third country in respect of income that is subject to tax in Canada. In these circumstances, it is appropriate to allow the foreign bank a tax credit in computing its tax payable in Canada on that income.

It is proposed that a new foreign tax credit be added to the Income Tax Act in respect of withholding taxes paid by a foreign bank to governments of countries other than its country of residence on business income subject to tax in Canada.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 16(2), will amend cl. 126(2.1)(a)(ii)(A) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 126(2.1) of the Act sets out a limit for the amount of a taxpayer's deduction under subsection 126(2) in respect of businesses carried on by the taxpayer in a country other than Canada.

The limit is the total of amounts computed under paragraphs 126(2.1)(a) and (b). The paragraph (a) amount is computed by multiplying the taxpayer's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction. The numerator of that fraction, determined under subparagraph 126(2.1)(a)(i), generally consists of a taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) from businesses carried on by the taxpayer in the particular country. The denominator of this fraction, determined under subparagraph 126(2.1)(a)(ii), consists generally of the amount by which the taxpayer's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the taxpayer is resident in Canada) exceeds the deductions listed in subclause 126(2.1)(a)(i)(A)(III).

Clause 126(2.1)(a)(ii)(A) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, as a consequence of changes to section 114. The changes update the references in the clause to section 114. Readers may refer to the notes on section 114 for more details.

(B) the amount, if any, added under section 110.5 in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the year, and

(b) that proportion of the amount, if any, added under subsection 120(1) to the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer that

(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (a)(i) in respect of the country is of

(ii) the amount, if any, by which,

(A) where section 114 does not apply to the taxpayer in respect of the year, the taxpayer's income for the year, and

(B) where section 114 applies to the taxpayer in respect of the year, the total of the taxpayer's income for the period or periods referred to in paragraph 114(a) and the amount that would be determined under paragraph 114(b) in respect of the taxpayer for the year if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f)

exceeds

(C) the taxpayer's income earned in the year in a province (within the meaning assigned by subsection 120(4)).

(2.2) Non-resident's foreign tax deduction — If at any time in a taxation year a taxpayer who is not at that time resident in Canada disposes of a property that was deemed by subsection 48(2), as it read in its application before 1993, or by paragraph 128.1(4)(e), as it read in its application before October 2, 1996, to be taxable Canadian property of the taxpayer, the taxpayer may deduct from the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the taxpayer an amount equal to the lesser of Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 16(3), will amend the portion of subsec. 126(2.2) before para. (b) to read as above, applicable to 1996 et seq.

Technical Notes: Canada generally makes foreign tax credits available only to persons who are resident in Canada. The only current exception to this principle is subsection 126(2.2), which provides a foreign tax credit to a non-resident individual who, as an emigrant from Canada, made the election provided under existing subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iv) of the Act in respect of one or more properties that were not taxable Canadian property.

With this election and the provision of security, the individual emigrant could choose to treat the properties as taxable Canadian property. That meant, on the one hand, that the individual was not treated as having disposed of those properties on emigration; but on the other hand, that any post-departure gain on the properties remained subject to Canadian tax (assuming no tax treaty applied). On the ultimate disposition of the deemed taxable Canadian property, subsection 126(2.2) allowed the former Canadian resident a credit for foreign tax on the gain.

Under the new rules for emigrants from Canada, the election in subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iv) is no longer available. Subsection 126(2.2) is therefore amended to apply only to properties that were deemed to be taxable Canadian properties under the election as it read before October 2, 1996. This amendment applies to the 1996 and subsequent taxation years.

Subsection 126(2.2) is also amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, to reflect the changes to section 114 of the Act. Readers may refer to the notes in respect of section 114 for further details.

is of

(ii) the amount that would be the taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada

(A) for the year, if section 114 is not applicable, or

(B) if section 114 is applicable, for the portion of the year referred to in paragraph 114(b)

if subsection 115(1) were read without reference to that portion thereof following paragraph 115(1)(c).

Proposed Amendment — 126(2.2)(b)(ii), (iii)

(ii) if the taxpayer is non-resident throughout the year, the taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada for the year determined without reference to paragraphs 115(1)(d) to (f), and

(iii) if the taxpayer is resident in Canada at any time in the year, the amount that would have been the taxpayer's taxable income earned in Canada for the year if the part of the year throughout which the taxpayer was non-resident were the whole taxation year.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 16(4), will amend subpara. 126(2.2)(b)(ii) to read as above, and add subpara. (iii), applicable to 1998 et seq.

Proposed Addition — 126(2.21), (2.22)

(2.21) Former resident — deduction — If at any particular time in a particular taxation year a non-resident individual disposes of a property that the individual last acquired because of the application, at any time (in this subsection referred to as the "acquisition time") after October 1, 1996, of paragraph 128.1(4)(c), there may be deducted from the individual's tax otherwise payable under this Part for the year (in this subsection referred to as the "emigration year") that includes the time immediately before the acquisition time an amount not exceeding the lesser of

(a) the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of any business-income tax or non-business-income tax paid by the individual for the particular year

(i) where the property is real property situated in a country other than Canada,

(A) to the government of that country, or

(B) to the government of a country with which Canada has a tax treaty at the particular time and in which the individual is resident at the particular time, if the particular time is before 2007, or

(ii) where the property is not real property, to the government of a country with which Canada has a tax treaty at the particular time and in which the individual is resident at the particular time, if the particular time is before 2007,

that can reasonably be regarded as having been paid in respect of that portion of any gain or profit from the disposition of the property that accrued while the individual was resident in Canada and before the time the individual last ceased to be resident in Canada, and

(b) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the amount of tax under this Part that was, after taking into account the application of this subsection in respect of dispositions that occurred before the particular time, otherwise payable by the individual for the emigration year

(ii) the amount of such tax that would have been payable if the particular property had not been deemed by subsection 128.1(4) to have been disposed of in the emigration year.

(2.22) Former resident — trust beneficiary — If at any particular time in a particular taxation year a non-resident individual disposes of a property that the individual last acquired at any time (in this subsection referred to as the "acquisition time") on a distribution after October 1, 1996 to which paragraphs 107(2)(a) to (c) do not apply only because of subsection 107(5), the trust may deduct from its tax otherwise payable under this Part for the year (in this subsection referred to as the "distribution year") that includes the acquisition time an amount not exceeding the lesser of

(a) the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of any business-income tax or non-business-income tax paid by the individual for the particular year

(i) where the property is real property situated in a country other than Canada,

(A) to the government of that country, or

(B) to the government of a country with which Canada has a tax treaty at the particular time and in which the individual is resident at the particular time, if the particular time is before 2007, or

(ii) where the property is not real property, to the government of a country with which Canada has a tax treaty at the particular time and in which the individual is resident at the particular time, if the particular time is before 2007,

that can reasonably be regarded as having been paid in respect of that portion of any gain or profit from the disposition of the property that accrued before the distribution and after the latest of the times, before the distribution, at which

(iii) the trust became resident in Canada,

(iv) the individual became a beneficiary under the trust, or

(v) the trust acquired the property, and

(b) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the amount of tax under this Part that was, after taking into account the application of this subsection in respect of dispositions that occurred before the particular time, otherwise payable by the trust for the distribution year

(ii) the amount of such tax that would have been payable by the trust for the distribution year if the particular property had not been distributed to the individual.

XIII:1 — Gain on real property taxable by country in which property is situated.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 16(5), will add subsecs. 126(2.21) and (2.22), applicable to 1996 et seq.

Technical Notes: In some circumstances, an individual who is a former resident of Canada may be subject to tax in another country on a gain that accrued while the individual was resident in Canada, and that has already been subject to Canadian tax on emigration. Similarly, the non-resident beneficiary of a Canadian trust who receives trust property on a distribution may be taxed abroad on a gain that accrued while the property was held by the trust, and that has been taxed in Canada on the distribution.

EXAMPLE — double taxation of pre-departure gain

Lee emigrates from Canada to Treatyland at a time when he owns a house in Treatyland. Lee bought the house while resident in Canada; at the time of emigration, the house has an adjusted cost base of $60,000 and a fair market value of $100,000. The resulting $40,000 latent capital gain will produce a taxable capital gain of $30,000 immediately before departure, and that taxable capital gain will be subject to Canadian tax.

Assume that the house increases in value to $120,000 after Lee leaves Canada, and that Lee sells the property in 2005 for that amount.

In principle, the gain that has been subject to Canadian tax ought not to be taxed a second time. However, Treatyland may not yet recognize the tax effect of changes in residence and may simply tax Lee, when the property is disposed of, on the full amount of the his gain since first acquiring the property. In that case, Treatyland will tax not only the $20,000 gain realized since Lee left Canada, but also the $40,000 gain that accrued while Lee was resident in Canada. In the end, Lee is taxed twice on the same gain.

The best way to alleviate such results is to modify Canada's tax treaties to ensure appropriate recognition for the Canadian tax that arises on departure. However, treaty changes can take considerable time. As an interim measure, new subsection 126(2.21) provides limited credits against an individual's Canadian tax that arises in the year of the individual's departure from Canada, for post-departure foreign taxes. These foreign taxes can comprise both business-income and non-business-income taxes (defined in subsection 126(7)). New subsection 126(2.22) provides similar limited credits against a trust's Canadian tax that arose in the year of a distribution by the trust to a non-resident beneficiary, for the beneficiary's subsequent foreign taxes.

Subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22) will apply, in most cases, only to foreign taxes that are paid in respect of dispositions before 2007, and only for taxes paid to countries with which Canada has a tax treaty. Exceptions are provided for taxes imposed by a foreign country on gains on real property situated in that country. In keeping with the general international principle that the country in which real property is located has the first right to tax gains on that real property, Canada will always provide credit for such taxes. Similarly, credit for those taxes will be available regardless whether Canada has a tax treaty with the particular country.

More specifically, subject to the conditions described above, the credit provided to an individual under new subsection 126(2.21) is computed on a property-by-property basis, as the lesser of two amounts.

The first amount, described in paragraph 126(2.21)(a), is the total of those portions of the foreign taxes paid in respect of the disposition of the property that can reasonably be considered to relate to the portion of the gain or profit in question that arose before the individual's emigration from Canada. Where the property in question is real property situated outside Canada, the creditable taxes are those paid to the government of the country where the property is located or, if the property is disposed of before 2007, to the government of another country in which the individual is resident and with which Canada has a tax treaty.

The second amount, described in paragraph 126(2.21)(b), is in effect the amount of the individual's tax under Part I of the Act for the year of emigration that is attributable to the deemed disposition of the particular property under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act. In determining this amount, previous applications of subsection 126(2.21) are taken into account.

EXAMPLE — operation of new credit

In the example above, Lee will be able to claim a credit for the lesser of 2/3 ($40,000/$60,000) of the Treatyland tax on the total amount of the gain, and the Canadian tax that arose because of the deemed disposition on emigration. The credit will be applied against Lee's Canadian tax for the emigration year, with amended subsection 152(6) allowing any necessary reassessment.

Note that since the property in question (a house) is real property, and the tax arose before 1997, Lee could also claim a credit for tax paid to another treaty country in respect of his pre-emigration gain, if he lived in that other country. For example, if the house were located not in Treatyland but in Nontreatyland, Lee could — as a resident of Treatyland — claim a credit in respect of both Treatyland tax and Nontreatyland tax. However, if Lee were resident in Nontreatyland, and the house were in Treatyland (or any country other than Nontreatyland), he could not claim a credit at all.

New subsection 126(2.22) sets out a comparable rule in respect of distributions after October 1, 1996 by Canadian-resident trusts to non-resident individuals. While the general operation of this rule is very similar to that of new subsection 126(2.21), it should be noted that in this case the credit involves two taxpayers: foreign taxes paid by the beneficiary are creditable against Canadian taxes paid by the trust.

A consequential amendment to subsection 152(6) of the Act ensures that any necessary assessments of tax will be made in order to take account of the effect of new subsections 126(2.21) and (2.22).

(2.3) Rules relating to unused foreign tax credit — For the purposes of this section,

(a) the amount claimed under paragraph (2)(a) by a taxpayer for a taxation year in respect of a country shall be deemed to be in respect of the business-income tax paid by the taxpayer for the year in respect of businesses carried on by the taxpayer in that country to the extent of the amount of that tax, and the remainder, if any, of the amount so claimed shall be deemed to be in respect of the taxpayer's unused foreign tax credits in respect of that country that may be claimed for the taxation year;

(b) no amount may be claimed under paragraph (2)(a) in computing a taxpayer's tax payable under this Part or Part I.1 for a particular taxation year in respect of the taxpayer's unused foreign tax credit in respect of a country for a taxation year until the taxpayer's unused foreign tax credits in respect of that country for taxation years preceding the taxation year that may be claimed for the particular taxation year have been claimed; and

(c) an amount in respect of a taxpayer's unused foreign tax credit in respect of a country for a taxation year may be claimed under paragraph (2)(a) in computing the taxpayer's tax payable under this Part or Part I.1 for a particular taxation year only to the extent that it exceeds the total of all amounts each of which is the amount that may reasonably be considered to have been claimed in respect of that unused foreign tax credit in computing the taxpayer's tax payable under this Part or Part I.1 for a taxation year preceding the particular taxation year.

Related Provisions: 87(2)(z) — Amalgamations; 88(1)(e.7) — Winding-up.

Pre-RSC History: Para. 126(2.3)(b) amended to substitute "tax payable under this Part or Part I.1" for "tax payable under this Part" and para. 126(2.3)(c) substituted by 1986, c. 55, subsec. 47(2), applicable to 1986 et seq. Para. 126(2.3)(c) formerly read:

> (c) an amount in respect of a taxpayer's unused foreign tax credit in respect of a country for a taxation year may be claimed under paragraph (2)(a) in computing his tax payable under this Part for a particular taxation year only to the extent that it exceeds the aggregate of amounts claimed in respect of that unused foreign tax credit in computing his tax payable under this Part for taxation years preceding the particular taxation year.

(3) Employees of international organizations — Where an individual is resident in Canada at any time in a taxation year, there may be deducted from the individual's tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part an amount equal to that proportion of the tax for the year otherwise payable under this Part by the individual that

(a) the individual's income

(i) for the year, where section 114 is not applicable to the individual in respect of the year, and

(ii) for the period or periods in the year referred to in paragraph 114(a), where section 114 is applicable to the individual in respect of the year,

Proposed Amendment — 126(3)(a)(i), (ii)

(i) for the year, if the individual is resident in Canada throughout the year, and

(ii) for the part of the year throughout which the individual was resident in Canada, if the individual is non-resident at any time in the year,

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 16(6), will amend subparas. 126(3)(a)(i) and (ii) to read as above, applicable to 1998 et seq.

Technical Notes: Subsection 126(3) of the Act provides a tax credit to Canadian-resident employees of international governmental organizations other than prescribed international governmental organizations. The amount of the credit is limited to the amount of any levy in lieu of taxes charged to the employee by the organization on the employee's remuneration.

The credit that may be claimed under subsection 126(3) is determined by multiplying the employee's Part I tax otherwise payable for a taxation year by a fraction. The numerator of that fraction, determined under paragraph 126(3)(a), consists of the employee's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the employee is resident in Canada) from employment with the organization; the denominator of the fraction, determined under paragraph 126(3)(b), consists generally of the amount by which the employee's income for the year (or, where section 114 applies, for the period or periods in the year throughout which the employee is resident in Canada) exceeds the deductions listed in subparagraph 126(3)(b)(iii).

Subsection 126(3) is amended, with application to the 1998 and subsequent taxation years, to revise its references to section 114 of the Act to reflect changes to that section. Readers may refer to the note in respect of section 114 for further details.

Proposed Amendment — SR&ED tax credits

Revenue Canada news release, June 17, 1999: Dhaliwal reports progress on research and development tax credit action plan

The Honourable Herb Dhaliwal, Minister of National Revenue and M.P. (Vancouver South-Burnaby), today reported on the progress that Revenue Canada has made in completing the steps called for in his Action Plan to improve the Scientific Research and Experimental Development (SR&ED) program.

Specifically, Mr. Dhaliwal summarized several accomplishments since the last progress report delivered in March 1999:

A consulting firm, Stitt Feld Handy Houston ADR of Ottawa and Toronto, has been selected to develop a dispute resolution system for the SR&ED program.

Through a joint industry/government initiative, Jean Claude Gavrel, a software specialist with extensive industry experience, has been retained for SR&ED's National Technology Sector Specialist (NTSS) program. Mr. Gavrel is an Information Technology executive with more than 20 years of experience in managing and implementing high technology product development and research programs. Other specialists will be identified in the future to supplement the Department's technology experience. The SR&ED program is being reorganized to bring Headquarters and field offices under one program head. Consultations with all regional offices have been completed and a framework has been established to strengthen the focus on the science and incentive aspects of the program.

Mr. Dhaliwal announced his Action Plan in a document entitled Building Partnerships in November 1998. The Action Plan responded to concerns and recommendations received from the industry at a Vancouver conference in June 1998. A key component of the Action Plan has been the establishment of a Steering Committee composed of industry representatives. The Steering Committee meets frequently to monitor progress of the Action Plan and to co-ordinate industry sector-specific working committees.

"With the progress made to date and with continued support from industry, Revenue Canada is on track to have a totally revitalized SR&ED program by the end of this year," Mr. Dhaliwal said.

The Minister added that the SR&ED program now delivers about $1.4 billion of federal assistance to Canadian business, and the number of participants nationwide has been growing at about 13% each year. The Minister also reiterated the commitment made in the last federal budget to invest more than $1.8 billion by 2003 to build on the knowledge and innovation initiatives introduced in previous budgets.

The action plan and SR&ED program information are available on Revenue Canada's Web site at: www.rc.gc.ca/sred Businesses interested in the SR&ED program should contact:

where

A is the cost to the supplier of rendering the particular service,

B is the total of all amounts each of which is the amount, if any, by which

(a) the cost to the supplier for a service (other than a service rendered by a person as an employee of the supplier) rendered by a person or partnership that does not deal at arm's length with the supplier to the extent that the cost is incurred for the purpose of rendering the particular service

(b) the adjusted service cost to the person or partnership referred to in paragraph (a) of rendering the service referred to in that paragraph to the supplier,

C is the total of all amounts each of which is the amount, if any, by which

(a) the cost to the supplier of a property acquired by the supplier from a person or partnership that does not deal at arm's length with the supplier

exceeds

(b) the adjusted selling cost to the person or partnership referred to in paragraph (a) of the property, to the extent that the excess relates to the cost of rendering the particular service,

D is the total of all amounts each of which is remuneration based on profits or a bonus paid or payable to an employee of the supplier to the extent that it is included in the cost to the supplier of rendering the particular service, and

E is the total of all amounts each of which is government assistance or non-government assistance that can reasonably be considered to be in respect of rendering the particular service and that the supplier has received, is entitled to receive or can reasonably be expected to receive;

"adjusted selling cost" to a person or partnership (referred to in this definition as the "supplier") of a property is the amount determined by the formula

where

A is

(a) where the property is purchased from another person or partnership with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length, the lesser of

(i) the cost to the supplier of the property, and

(ii) the adjusted selling cost to the other person or partnership of the property, and

(b) in any other case, the cost to the supplier of the property, and for the purpose of paragraph (b),

(c) where part of the cost to a supplier of a particular property is attributable to another property acquired by the supplier from a person or partnership with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length, that part of the cost is deemed to be the lesser of

(i) the amount of that part of the cost otherwise determined, and

(ii) the adjusted selling cost to the person or the partnership of the other property,

(d) where part of the cost to a supplier of a property is attributable to a service (other than a service rendered by a person as an employee of the supplier) rendered to the supplier by a person or partnership with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length, that part of the cost is deemed to be the lesser of

(i) the amount of that part of the cost otherwise determined, and

(a) the cost to a person or partnership (referred to in this paragraph as the "supplier") of rendering a service or providing a property to another person or partnership (referred to in this paragraph as the "recipient") with which the supplier does not deal at arm's length does not include,

(i) where the cost to the recipient of the service rendered or property provided by the supplier would, but for this paragraph, be a cost to the recipient incurred in rendering a particular service or providing a particular property to a person or partnership with which the recipient does not deal at arm's length, any expenditure of the supplier to the extent that it would, if it were incurred by the recipient in rendering the particular service or providing the particular property, be excluded from a cost to the recipient because of this paragraph, and

(ii) in any other case, any expenditure of the supplier to the extent that it would, if it were incurred by the recipient, not be a qualified expenditure of the recipient;

(b) paragraph 69(1)(c) does not apply in determining the cost of a property; and

(3) [Repealed]

History: Subsec. 128(3) repealed by 1998, c. 19, subsec. 152(4), applicable to bankruptcies that occur after April 26, 1995. Subsec. 128(3) formerly read:

(3) Definitions of "bankrupt" and "estate of the bankrupt" — In this section, "bankrupt" and "estate of the bankrupt" have the meanings assigned by the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

Changes in Residence

128.1 (1) Immigration — For the purposes of this Act, where at a particular time a taxpayer becomes resident in Canada,

(a) year-end, fiscal period — where the taxpayer is a corporation or a trust,

(i) the taxpayer's taxation year that would otherwise include the particular time shall be deemed to have ended immediately before the particular time and a new taxation year of the taxpayer shall be deemed to have begun at the particular time, and

(ii) for the purpose of determining the taxpayer's fiscal period after the particular time, the taxpayer shall be deemed not to have established a fiscal period before the particular time;

(b) deemed disposition — the taxpayer is deemed to have disposed, at the time (in this subsection referred to as the "time of disposition") that is immediately before the time that is immediately before the particular time, of each property owned by the taxpayer, other than, if the taxpayer is an individual,

(i) property that would be taxable Canadian property if the taxpayer had been resident in Canada at no time in the taxpayer's last taxation year that began before the particular time,

Proposed Amendment — 128.1(1)(b)(i)

(i) property that is a taxable Canadian property,

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 17(1), will amend subpara. 128.1(1)(b)(i) to read as above, applicable to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Section 128.1 of the Act sets out the income tax effects of becoming or ceasing to be resident in Canada. The present amendments make several important additions to section 128.1, including:

- a more comprehensive deemed disposition of property by individual emigrants;
- greater clarity as to the exclusion of certain pension and other rights from the deemed dispositions on emigration and immigration;
- special accommodation of individuals (other than trusts) who, having emigrated from Canada, re-establish residence in Canada within 60 months or less;
- the ability for post-emigration losses in effect to reduce gains realized as a result of the deemed disposition on emigration; and
- in certain circumstances, a deemed end to the fiscal period of a business carried on by an individual emigrant.

In addition, these amendments make a number of clarifying and updating changes to section 128.1. They also revise the section as necessary to reflect other amendments such as the restructured definition "taxable Canadian property" and the changes to section 114 of the Act.

Subsection 128.1(1) of the Act sets out rules that apply where a taxpayer becomes resident in Canada. Paragraph 128.1(1)(b) treats a taxpayer who becomes resident in Canada as having disposed of the taxpayer's property, with certain exceptions, for proceeds equal to the property's fair market value. This disposition is deemed to have taken place immediately before the time that is immediately before the time at which the taxpayer becomes resident.

The properties excluded from the deemed disposition on immigration under paragraph 128.1(1)(b) are essentially those properties that were, ignoring any relevant tax treaty, already subject to tax in Canada. Subparagraph 128.1(1)(b)(i) sets out one type of excluded property, being taxable Canadian property. Subparagraph 128.1(1)(b)(i) is amended, with application after October 1, 1996, to simplify its description of taxable Canadian property. This change is a consequence of the relocation of the main definition of taxable Canadian property to subsection 248(1) of the Act.

(ii) property that is described in the inventory of a business carried on by the taxpayer in Canada at the time of disposition,

(iii) eligible capital property in respect of a business carried on by the taxpayer in Canada at the time of disposition,

(iv) property in respect of which the taxpayer elected under paragraph 48(1)(c), as it read in its application before 1993, or subparagraph (4)(b)(iv) in respect of the last preceding time the taxpayer ceased to be resident in Canada, and

(v) a right to acquire shares of the capital stock of a corporation where section 7 would apply if the taxpayer disposed of the right to a person with whom the taxpayer was dealing at arm's length,

Proposed Amendment — 128.1(1)(b)(iv), (v)

(iv) any property described in any of subparagraphs (4)(b)(iii) to (v), and

(v) a right to acquire a share of the capital stock of a corporation, where section 7 would apply if the taxpayer disposed of the right to a person with whom the taxpayer was dealing at arm's length,

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 17(2), will amend subpara. 128.1(1)(b)(iv) and (v) to read as above, applicable to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: In its current form, subparagraph 128.1(1)(b)(iv) provides that, where a taxpayer has elected on an earlier emigration that a property not be subject to a deemed disposition at that time, the property is also not deemed to have been disposed of on the taxpayer's re-establishment of residence in Canada. Since one of the effects of having made that election (set out in existing subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iv)) is that the property will have been deemed to be taxable Canadian property, which is in any case excluded from an individual's deemed disposition on emigration, the current version of subparagraph (iv) is not clearly necessary. The subparagraph can therefore be replaced with a different rule.

New subparagraph 128.1(1)(b)(iv) excludes from the deemed disposition on immigration any property described in subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iii) to (v). Those provisions list a number of kinds of rights to receive payments, including pension and similar benefits.

Subparagraph 128.1(1)(b)(v) excludes from the deemed disposition on immigration a stock option that is subject to section 7 of the Act. This subparagraph is amended to update its language.

for proceeds equal to its fair market value at the time of disposition;

(c) deemed acquisition — the taxpayer shall be deemed to have acquired at the particular time each property deemed by paragraph (b) to have been disposed of by the taxpayer, at a cost equal to the proceeds of disposition of the property;

(c.1) deemed dividend to immigrating corporation — if the taxpayer is a particular corporation that immediately before the time of disposition owned a share of the capital stock of another corporation resident in Canada, a dividend is deemed to have been paid by the other corporation, and received by the particular corporation, immediately before the time of disposition, equal to the amount, if any, by which the fair market value of the share immediately before the time of disposition exceeds the total of

(i) the paid-up capital in respect of the share immediately before the time of disposition, and

(ii) if the share immediately before the time of disposition was taxable Canadian property that is not treaty-protected property, the amount by which, at the time of disposition, the fair market value of the share exceeds its cost amount;

(c.2) deemed dividend to shareholder of immigrating corporation — if the taxpayer is a corporation and an amount has been added to the paid-up capital in respect of a class of shares of the corporation's capital stock because of paragraph (2)(b),

(i) the corporation is deemed to have paid, immediately before the time of disposition, a dividend on the issued shares of the class equal to the amount of the paid-up capital adjustment in respect of the class, and

(ii) a dividend is deemed to have been received, immediately before the time of disposition, by each person (other than a person in respect of whom the corporation is a foreign affiliate) who held any of the issued shares of the class equal to that proportion of the dividend so deemed to have been paid that the number of shares of the class held by the person immediately before the time of disposition is of the number of issued shares of the class outstanding immediately before the time of disposition; and

(d) foreign affiliate — where the taxpayer was, immediately before the particular time, a foreign affiliate of another taxpayer that is resident in Canada,

(i) the affiliate shall be deemed to have been a controlled foreign affiliate (within the meaning assigned by subsection 95(1)) of the other taxpayer immediately before the particular time, and

(ii) such amount as is prescribed shall be included in the foreign accrual property income (within the meaning assigned by subsection 95(1)) of the affiliate for its taxation year ending immediately before the particular time.

(2) Paid-up capital adjustment — If a corporation becomes resident in Canada at a particular time,

(a) for the purposes of subsection (1) and this subsection, the "paid-up capital adjustment" in respect of a particular class of shares of the corporation's capital stock in respect of that acquisition of residence is the positive or negative amount determined by the formula

where

A is the amount, if any, by which

(i) the total of all amounts each of which is an amount deemed by paragraph (1)(c) to be the cost to the corporation of property deemed under that paragraph to have been acquired by the corporation at the particular time

exceeds

(ii) the total of all amounts each of which is the amount of a debt owing by the corporation, or any other obligation of the corporation to pay an amount, that is outstanding at the particular time,

B is the fair market value at the particular time of all of the shares of the particular class,

C is the total of all amounts each of which is the fair market value at the particular time of all of the shares of a class of shares of the corporation's capital stock, and

(b) for the purposes of this Act, in computing the paid-up capital in respect of a class of shares of the corporation's capital stock at any time after the particular time and before the time, if any, at which the corporation next becomes resident in Canada, there shall be

(i) added the amount of the paid-up capital adjustment in respect of the particular class, if that amount is positive and the corporation so elects for all such classes in respect of that acquisition of residence by notifying the Minister in writing within 90 days after the particular time, and

(ii) deducted, if the amount of the paid-up capital adjustment in respect of the particular class is negative, the absolute value of that amount.

Related Provisions: 128.1(1)(c.2) — Deemed dividend to shareholder of immigrating corporation; 257 — Formula cannot calculate to less than zero.

History: Subsec. 128.1(2) amended by 1999, c. 22, subsec. 52(3), applicable to corporations that become resident in Canada after February 23, 1998, except that an election made under subpara. 128.1(2)(b)(i), as amended, is deemed to have been made in a timely manner if it is made by the corporation, with the consent of all who were shareholders of the corporation immediately before the time of disposition (within the meaning assigned by para. 128.1(1)(b)), before April 1, 1999. The subsec. formerly read:

(2) Idem — paid-up capital — For the purposes of this Act, where at a particular time a corporation becomes resident in Canada, in computing the paid-up capital at any time after the particular time in respect of a particular class of shares of the capital stock of the corporation, there shall be deducted the amount determined by the formula

Para. (c) of the description of C in subsec. 128.1(2) amended by 1998, c. 19, s. 153, applicable to taxation years that begin after 1995 except that, in its application to taxation years that begin in 1996, the reference in para. (c) to "paragraph 219(1)(j)" shall be read as a reference to "paragraph 219(1)(h) as it read in its application to the 1995 taxation year or paragraph 219(1)(j)". Para. (c) formerly read:

(3) Paid-up capital adjustment — In computing the paid-up capital at any time in respect of a class of shares of the corporation's capital stock, there shall be deducted an amount equal to the lesser of A and B, and added an amount equal to the lesser of A and C, where

A is the absolute value of the difference between

(a) the total of all amounts deemed by subsection 84(3), (4) or (4.1) to be a dividend on shares of the class paid before that time by the corporation, and

(b) the total that would be determined under paragraph (a) if this Act were read without reference to subsection (2),

B is the total of all amounts required by subsection (2) to be added in computing the paid-up capital in respect of the class before that time, and

C is the total of all amounts required by subsection (2) to be subtracted in computing the paid-up capital in respect of the class before that time.

(a) the amount, if any, by which

(i) the total of all amounts deemed by subsection 84(3), (4) or (4.1) to be a dividend on shares of the class paid before that time by the corporation

exceeds

(ii) the total that would be determined under subparagraph (i) if this Act were read without reference to subsection (2), and

(b) the total of all amounts required by subsection (2) to be deducted in computing the paid-up capital in respect of that class of shares before that time.

Subsec. 128.1(3) enacted by 1994, c. 21, s. 62, applicable after 1992 except that where a corporation elects in accordance with para. 111(4)(a) of 1994, c. 21 (i.e., elects before the end of December 1994 for new subsec. 250(5.1) to apply in respect of a continuance before 1993), the section applies to the corporation from the time at which the corporation was first granted articles of continuation (or similar constitutional documents) in any jurisdiction.

(4) Emigration — For the purposes of this Act, where at any particular time a taxpayer ceases to be resident in Canada,

(a) year-end, fiscal period — where the taxpayer is a corporation or a trust,

(i) the taxpayer's taxation year that would otherwise include the particular time shall be deemed to have ended immediately before the particular time and a new taxation year of the taxpayer shall be deemed to have begun at the particular time, and

(ii) for the purpose of determining the taxpayer's fiscal period after the particular time, the taxpayer shall be deemed not to have established a fiscal period before the particular time;

Proposed Addition — 128.1(4)(a.1)

(a.1) fiscal period — if the taxpayer is an individual (other than a trust) and carries on a business at the particular time, otherwise than through a permanent establishment (as defined by regulation) in Canada,

(i) the fiscal period of the business is deemed to have ended immediately before the particular time and a new fiscal period of the business is deemed to have begun at the particular time, and

(ii) for the purpose of determining the fiscal period of the business after the particular time, the taxpayer is deemed not to have established a fiscal period of the business before the particular time;

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 17(3), will add para. 128.1(4)(a.1), applicable to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Subsection 128.1(4) sets out rules that apply where a taxpayer ceases to be resident in Canada. New paragraph 128.1(4)(a.1) provides that the fiscal period of any business carried on by an individual emigrant (other than a trust), otherwise than through a permanent establishment in Canada, is deemed to have ended immediately before the emigration time and a new fiscal period of the business is deemed to have begun at the emigration time. This ensures the appropriate measurement of the individual's pre-departure income or loss from the business. The paragraph, which applies to changes in residence after October 1, 1996, also allows the emigrant to choose a new fiscal period of the business.

(b) deemed disposition — the taxpayer shall be deemed to have disposed, at the time (in this paragraph and paragraph (d) referred to as the "time of disposition") that is immediately before the time that is immediately before the particular time, of each property owned by the taxpayer, other than

(i) where the taxpayer is an individual, property that would be taxable Canadian property if the taxpayer had been resident in Canada at no time in the taxpayer's last taxation year that began before the particular time,

(ii) where the taxpayer is an individual, property that is described in the inventory of a business carried on by the taxpayer in Canada at the particular time,

(iii) where the taxpayer is an individual, a right to receive a payment described in any of paragraphs 212(1)(h) and (j) to (q), a right under a registered education savings plan or a right to receive any payment of a benefit under the Canada Pension Plan or a provincial pension plan as defined in section 3 of that Act,

(iv) where the taxpayer is an individual other than a trust, each capital property not described in any of subparagraphs (i) to (iii) in respect of which, on or before the taxpayer's balance-due day for the taxation year in which the taxpayer ceased to be resident in Canada, the taxpayer elects in prescribed manner and furnishes to the Minister security acceptable to the Minister for the payment of the additional tax that would have been payable by the taxpayer under this Part for the year had the taxpayer not so elected,

(v) where the taxpayer is an individual other than a trust and was, during the 10 years immediately preceding the particular time, resident in Canada for a period or periods totalling 60 months or less, property that was

(A) owned by the taxpayer at the time the taxpayer last became resident in Canada, or

(B) acquired by the taxpayer by inheritance or bequest after the taxpayer last became resident in Canada, and

(vi) a right to acquire shares of the capital stock of a corporation where section 7 would apply if the taxpayer disposed of the right to a person with whom the taxpayer was dealing at arm's length, for proceeds equal to its fair market value at the time of disposition, which proceeds shall be deemed to have become receivable and to have been received by the taxpayer at the time of disposition;

Proposed Amendment — 128.1(4)(b)

(b) deemed disposition — the taxpayer is deemed to have disposed, at the time (in this paragraph and paragraphs (d) and (d.1) referred to as the "time of disposition") that is immediately before the time that is immediately before the particular time, of each property owned by the taxpayer other than, if the taxpayer is an individual,

(i) real property situated in Canada, a Canadian resource property or a timber resource property,

(ii) capital property used in, eligible capital property in respect of, or property described in the inventory of, a business carried on by the taxpayer through a permanent establishment (as defined by regulation) in Canada at the particular time,

(iii) a right to receive a payment described in any of paragraphs 212(1)(h), (j) to (q) and (t) to (v), a right under a registered education savings plan or a right to receive any payment of a benefit under the Canada Pension Plan or a provincial pension plan as defined in section 3 of that Act,

(iv) a right to a benefit under a plan, arrangement or trust referred to in any of paragraphs 6(1)(d) and (g) to (i), other than an employee benefit plan described in subparagraph (v),

(v) a right to a benefit under an employee benefit plan that is

(A) a plan or arrangement described in paragraph (j) of the definition "salary deferral arrangement" in subsection 248(1) that would, but for paragraphs (j) and (k) of that definition, be a salary deferral arrangement, or

(B) a plan or arrangement that would, but for paragraph (c) of section 6801 of the Income Tax Regulations, be a salary deferral arrangement, to the extent that the benefit can reasonably be considered to be attributable to services rendered by the taxpayer in Canada,

(vi) if the taxpayer is not a trust and was not, during the 120-month period that ends at the particular time, resident in Canada for more than 60 months, property that was owned by the taxpayer at the time the taxpayer last became resident in Canada or acquired by the taxpayer by inheritance or bequest after the taxpayer last became resident in Canada,

(vii) a right to acquire a share of the capital stock of a corporation, where section 7 would apply if the taxpayer disposed of the right to a person with whom the taxpayer was dealing at arm's length,

(viii) an interest in a trust described in any of paragraphs (a), (c), (d) and (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1), other than a trust governed by an employee benefit plan described in subparagraph (v),

(ix) an interest in a personal trust resident in Canada if the interest was never acquired for consideration and the interest did not arise as a consequence of a qualifying disposition (as defined in subsection 107.4(1)),

(x) an interest in a non-resident testamentary trust if the interest was never acquired for consideration,

(xi) an interest in a life insurance policy in Canada, other than a policy described in subsection 138.1(1), and

(xii) any property in respect of which the taxpayer elects under paragraph (6)(a) for the taxation year that includes the first time, after the particular time, at which the taxpayer becomes resident in Canada, for proceeds equal to its fair market value at the time of disposition, which proceeds are deemed to have become receivable and to have been received by the taxpayer at the time of disposition;

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 17(3), will amend para. 128.1(4)(b) to read as above, applicable to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996.

Clause 18 of the amending legislation provides that if an individual ceased at any time after 1992 and before October 2, 1996 to be resident in Canada and so elects in writing filed with the Minister of National Revenue before the end of the sixth month following the month in which this Act is assented to, in respect of that cessation of residence subpara. 128.1(4)(b)(iii) of the Act shall be read as follows:

(iii) if the taxpayer is an individual,

(A) a right to receive a payment described in any of paragraphs 212(1)(h), (j) to (q) and (t) to (v) or a right under a registered education savings plan,

(B) a right to receive any payment of a benefit under the Canada Pension Plan or a provincial pension plan as defined in section 3 of that Act,

(C) a right to a benefit under a plan, arrangement or trust referred to in any of paragraphs 6(1)(d) and (g) to (i), other than an employee benefit plan described in clause (D),

(D) a right to a benefit under an employee benefit plan that is

(I) a plan or arrangement described in paragraph (j) of the definition "salary deferral arrangement" in subsection 248(1) and that would, but for paragraphs (j) and (k) of that definition, be a salary deferral arrangement, or

(II) a plan or arrangement that would, but for paragraph (c) of section 6801 of the Income Tax Regulations, be a salary deferral arrangement, to the extent that the benefit can reasonably be considered to be attributable to services rendered by the taxpayer in Canada,

(E) an interest in a trust described in any of paragraphs (a), (c), (d) and (e.1) of the definition "trust" in subsection 108(1) (other than a trust governed by an employee benefit plan described in clause (D)), and, notwithstanding subsections 152(4) to (5), such assessment of tax payable under the Act by the individual for the year that includes that time shall be made as is necessary to take the election into account.

Technical Notes: Paragraph 128.1(4)(b) treats a taxpayer who ceases to be resident in Canada as having disposed of the taxpayer's property, for proceeds equal to fair market value. This disposition is deemed to have taken place at a "time of disposition" that is immediately before the time that is immediately before the time the taxpayer ceases to be resident. The time of cessation of residence is referred to in the provision as the "particular time" and in these notes as the "emigration time."

Where the taxpayer is an individual, certain types of property are exempted from the deemed disposition. These properties, generally, are those that would be subject to Canadian taxation in the hands of a non-resident.

Paragraph 128.1(4)(b) is amended to ensure that this policy is better reflected in the legislation. Under amended paragraph 128.1(4)(b), an individual emigrant from Canada is treated as having disposed of all property other than:

(i) real property situated in Canada, Canadian resource properties and timber resource properties;

(ii) property of a business carried on by the taxpayer, at the emigration time, through a permanent establishment in Canada — including capital property, eligible capital property and property described in the inventory of the business;

(iii) rights to receive specified pension and similar payments, including rights under RRSPs, RRIFs, DPSPs, and rights to various other benefits;

(iv) rights to certain benefits under employees profit sharing plans, employee benefit plans (except the plans described in subparagraph (v)), employee trusts and salary deferral arrangements;

(v) rights to benefits under certain employee benefit plans (EBPs) that are in substance salary deferral arrangements, to the extent the benefit relates to the taxpayer's service in Canada;

(vi) certain property of short-term residents (see below);

(vii) employee stock options that are subject to section 7 of the Act;

(viii) interests in specified trusts, generally linked to employee compensation (but not including an interest in a trust governed by an EBP);

(ix) interests in personal trusts resident in Canada, provided the interests were never acquired — by any person — for consideration and did not arise through a qualifying disposition as defined in subsection 107.4(1) of the Act;

(x) interests in non-resident testamentary trusts, provided the interests were never acquired — again, by any person — for consideration;

(xi) interests in life insurance policies in Canada, other than interests in segregated fund policies; and

(xii) certain property of a short-term non-resident (see the notes on new subsection 128.1(6) of the Act).

Under new subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(vi), an individual (other than a trust) who has been resident in Canada for 60 months or less during the 10-year period preceding the cessation of residence is not deemed to dispose of any property that the individual owned on becoming resident in Canada, or that the individual inherited after becoming resident here. (This exception was formerly provided under subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(v).)

Where an individual (other than a trust) re-establishes Canadian residence within 60 months of having ceased to be a resident, a special rule, set out in new subsection 128.1(6), enables the individual to exclude all property from the deemed disposition in respect of the cessation of residence. Readers may refer to the notes on new subsection 128.1(6) for further details.

Amended paragraph 128.1(4)(b) generally applies after October 1, 1996. In addition, clause 18 provides that an individual who ceased to be a Canadian resident after 1992 and before October 2, 1996 may also choose to exclude rights to receive a pension or similar payments, rights under most employee benefit plans and certain trust interests from the deemed disposition in respect of the cessation of residence. This election must be made in writing filed with the Minister of National Revenue within six months of these amendments receiving Royal Assent. It should also be noted that this election will cause amended subparagraph 115(1)(a)(i) of the Act to apply. Readers may refer to the notes on that provision for more details.

Transition

Paragraph 128.1(4)(b) of the Act treats a person who ceases to be resident in Canada as having disposed of most of the person's properties. The changes these proposals introduce to that deemed disposition apply, as a general matter, after October 1, 1996. However, certain of the changes are relieving clarifications of the scope of the deemed disposition. This clause allows a taxpayer who ceased to be resident in Canada after 1992 and before October 2, 1996 to elect that those relieving changes apply to that cessation of residence. It should be noted that such an election, which must be made in writing filed with the Minister of National Revenue before the end of the sixth month following Royal Assent to these proposals, will also cause certain changes to section 115 of the Act to apply.

Readers may consult the notes on section 115 and subsection 128.1(4) of the Act for more information.

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (re taxpayer emigration), October 2, 1996: See under 128.1(4)(d)-(f).

(c) reacquisition — the taxpayer shall be deemed to have reacquired, at the particular time, each property deemed by paragraph (b) to have been disposed of by the taxpayer, at a cost equal to the proceeds of disposition of the property;

(d) individual — notwithstanding paragraphs (b) and (c), where a taxpayer who is an individual other than a trust so elects in prescribed manner, on or before the taxpayer's balance-due day for the taxation year that includes the particular time, in respect of any property described in subparagraph (b)(i) or (ii), the taxpayer shall be deemed to have disposed of the property at the time of disposition for proceeds equal to its fair market value at that time, and to have reacquired the property at the particular time at a cost equal to those proceeds;

(e) deemed [taxable Canadian] property — capital property in respect of which a taxpayer elects under subparagraph (b)(iv) shall be deemed to be taxable Canadian property of the taxpayer from the particular time until the earlier of

(i) the time when the taxpayer disposes of the property, and

(ii) the time when the taxpayer next becomes resident in Canada; and

(f) losses on election — where a taxpayer elects under subparagraph (b)(iv) or paragraph (d),

(i) the taxpayer's income for the taxation year that includes the particular time shall be deemed to be the greater of

(A) that income otherwise determined, and

(B) the lesser of

(I) that income determined without reference to this subsection, and

(II) that income determined without reference to subparagraph (b)(iv) and paragraph (d), and

(ii) the amount of each of the taxpayer's non-capital loss, net capital loss, restricted farm loss, farm loss and limited partnership loss for the taxation year that includes the particular time shall be deemed to be the lesser of

(A) that amount otherwise determined, and

(B) the greater of

(I) that amount determined without reference to this subsection, and

(II) that amount determined without reference to subparagraph (b)(iv) and paragraph (d).

Proposed Amendment — 128.1(4)(d)–(f)

(d) individual — elective disposition — notwithstanding paragraphs (b) to (c), if the taxpayer is an individual (other than a trust) and so elects in prescribed form and manner in respect of a property described in subparagraph (b)(i) or (ii),

(i) the taxpayer is deemed to have disposed of the property at the time of disposition for proceeds equal to its fair market value at that time and to have reacquired the property at the particular time at a cost equal to those proceeds,

(ii) the taxpayer's income for the taxation year that includes the particular time is deemed to be the greater of

(A) that income determined without reference to this subparagraph, and

(B) the lesser of

(I) that income determined without reference to this subsection, and

(II) that income determined without reference to subparagraph (i), and

(iii) each of the taxpayer's non-capital loss, net capital loss, restricted farm loss, farm loss and limited partnership loss for the taxation year that includes the particular time is deemed to be the lesser of

(A) that amount determined without reference to this subparagraph, and

(B) the greater of

(I) that amount determined without reference to this subsection, and

(II) that amount determined without reference to subparagraph (i); and

(d.1) shares — if the taxpayer is deemed by paragraph (b) to have disposed of a share in respect of which section 7 would apply if the taxpayer disposed of the share to another person, there shall be deducted from the taxpayer's proceeds in respect of the disposition the amount, if any, that would be added under paragraph 53(1)(j) in computing the adjusted cost base to the taxpayer of the share if subsection 7(1.1) applied to the disposition.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 17(4), will amend para. 128.1(4)(d) to read as above, add para. (d.1), and repeal paras. (e) and (f), para. (d) and the repeal applicable to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996, and para. (d.1) applicable to changes in residence that occur after 1992.

Technical Notes: Paragraph 128.1(4)(b) treats taxpayers that cease to be resident in Canada as having disposed of their property, subject to certain exceptions, for proceeds equal to the property's fair market value. Paragraph 128.1(4)(d) allows an individual (other than a trust) to choose to treat certain of the properties that would otherwise be exempt from that deemed disposition as having been disposed of. An emigrant might make this choice if, for example, the emigrant wanted to realize a latent loss on such a property in order to offset a gain resulting from the deemed disposition.

This optional deemed disposition is retained in amended paragraph (d). In addition, the paragraph reproduces the effect of existing paragraph 128.1(4)(f), which ensures that losses realized as a result of a paragraph (d) election may only offset the increase, if any, in the taxpayer's income as a result of the deemed disposition on emigration. With this effect now provided in paragraph (d) itself, paragraph (f) is no longer necessary and is repealed.

New paragraph 128.1(4)(d.1) is introduced to ensure appropriate tax consequences where an individual (other than a trust) emigrates from Canada holding shares of a Canadian-controlled private corporation (CCPC) issued under an employee stock option plan. Section 7 of the Act provides for an income inclusion in respect of shares issued to an employee under such a plan. Generally, this employment benefit is included in the employee's income in the year that the stock option is exercised. Subsection 7(1.1) provides an exception in the case of shares of a CCPC: the income inclusion generally takes place only in the year in which the employee disposes of or exchanges the shares. New paragraph 128.1(4)(d.1) applies to reduce the individual's proceeds of disposition in respect of such shares by the amount, if any, that would have been added to the shares' adjusted cost base under paragraph 53(1)(j) of the Act had subsection 7(1.1) applied to the disposition. This amendment ensures that the measurement of the individual's gain on the share takes into account the amount that will eventually be taxed under section 7.

EXAMPLE — CCPC shares acquired under employee stock option

From 1993 to 1998, Katharine was employed by a Canadian-controlled private corporation (CCPC). Part of Katharine's compensation for 1995 was an option to buy 100 shares of the corporation at a price of $1 a share. In 1996, when the shares were worth $2 each, Katharine exercised the option. In 1999, when the shares are worth $6 each, Katharine emigrates from Canada.

Under amended paragraph 128.1(4)(b), Katharine will be treated as having disposed of the shares for proceeds of $600 (100 × $6 fair market value). Ordinarily, disposing of the shares would trigger an income inclusion of $100 under subsection 7(1.1), a deduction of $25 in computing taxable income under paragraph 110(1)(d.1), and a taxable capital gain of $300 (.75 × ($600 – $200)). As a result of new subsection 7(1.6), however, Katharine will not be subject to any income inclusion under section 7 in respect of the disposition. New paragraph 128.1(4)(d.1) will deduct from her proceeds of disposition of the shares the $100 that paragraph 53(1)(j) would have added to their adjusted cost base if there had been such an income inclusion, and Katharine will be treated as having realized her $300 taxable capital gain.

Existing paragraph 128.1(4)(e) relates to the election, under existing subparagraph (b)(iv), to exclude from the deemed disposition on emigration a property that is not taxable Canadian property. If an emigrant uses this optional exclusion, paragraph (e) treats the property as taxable Canadian property of the taxpayer until the property is disposed of or the taxpayer returns to Canada. Since the subparagraph (b)(iv) election is no longer available, paragraph (e) is repealed.

New paragraph 128.1(4)(d.1) applies to changes in residence after 1992. The other amendments described above apply to changes in residence after October 1, 1996.

Notice of Ways and Means Motion (re taxpayer emigration), October 2, 1996: Property used in carrying on business in Canada

(3) That any capital property used by a non-resident person at any time after October 1, 1996 in carrying on a business (other than an insurance business) in Canada, and that ceases at any subsequent time to be so used by that person (otherwise than by reason of the property's disposition) be deemed to have been disposed of by the person for proceeds equal to the property's fair market value at that subsequent time.

Information reporting

(4) That all individuals who cease at any time after 1995 to be Canadian residents and who own at that time property the total fair market value of which is greater than $25,000 be required to provide a report in prescribed form listing each property that they owned at that time (other than a personal-use property that has a fair market value of less than $10,000).

Deemed disposition on emigration

(5) That the deemed disposition on emigration under subsection 128.1(4) of the Act be revised, in respect of an individual who at any time after October 1, 1996 ceases to be resident in Canada, to:

(a) provide for the mandatory deemed disposition and reacquisition at fair market value of all the individual's property other than

(i) real property situated in Canada,

(ii) capital property used in, or property described in an inventory of, a business carried on by the individual through a permanent establishment in Canada immediately before that time, and

(iii) property described in subparagraph 128.1(4)(b)(iii), (v) or (vi) of the Act, and

(b) permit the individual to provide security acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue for the payment of any tax liability arising as a result of the deemed disposition described in subparagraph (a).

Trust distributions

(6) That

(a) any property (other than property described in any of clauses (5)(a)(i) to (iii)) distributed by a trust at any time after October 1, 1996 to a non-resident beneficiary be deemed to have been disposed of by the trust at its fair market value at that time, and that the trust or the beneficiary be allowed to provide security acceptable to the Minister of National Revenue for the payment of any tax arising as a result of the deemed disposition of any property that was taxable Canadian property, and

(b) any property that was taxable Canadian property of a trust and that was distributed by the trust to a beneficiary on or before October 1, 1996 be deemed, for greater certainty, to be taxable Canadian property of the beneficiary after that date.

Technical Background

Taxpayer Migration

1. Overview

This Notice of Ways and Means Motion expresses the Government's intention to recommend certain changes to the income tax rules that apply to taxpayers who enter or leave Canada. Most of these changes are rather technical in nature. The most far-reaching proposals will require a more comprehensive deemed disposition and reacquisition of an emigrant's property, and will impose new reporting requirements on individual emigrants.

The Government recognizes the significance of these proposed changes, and invites Canadians to comment on them as they proceed toward implementation.

2. The current rules

Canada is among the very few countries that impose any special tax rules on individuals who become or cease to be residents. The main purpose of these rules, which have applied since 1972, is to ensure that immigrants and emigrants are taxed in Canada on all their gains on Canadian property, and on other gains that accrued while they were resident in Canada.

Immigration

A taxpayer who becomes a resident of Canada is generally treated as having disposed of and reacquired all of the taxpayer's property at its fair market value. This ensures that Canada will tax only that part of any gain on the property that accrued after the person became resident here. Property in respect of which any gain was already subject to tax in Canada ("taxable Canadian property", or TCP) is not subject to this deemed disposition. That is because Canada's Income Tax Act subjects the full amount of such gains to tax when the property is actually disposed of.

Example

N. moved to Canada from Country A in 1985. At the time of the move, N. owned an apartment building situated in Country A, and one in Canada. Each property cost N. $75,000 (or the equivalent), and each had a fair market value in 1985 of $100,000. N. sold both buildings in 1995, for $125,000 each.

For Canadian tax purposes N. was treated as having disposed of and reacquired the building in Country A for $100,000 before becoming a resident of Canada. N.'s tax cost of the building is now $100,000. Canada will thus tax only the $18,750 taxable capital gain ($25,000 capital gain X 75%) on the building in Country A that accrued while N. was a resident of Canada. Since the Canadian building is taxable Canadian property, N. was not treated as having disposed of it in 1985. Canada will tax, in 1995, the full $37,500 taxable capital gain ($50,000 capital gain X 75%) on that building.

Emigration

A taxpayer who ceases to be resident in Canada is generally treated as having disposed of and reacquired, at fair market value, all the taxpayer's property other than taxable Canadian property, stock options, and certain pension and similar rights. Individuals (other than trusts, which are individuals for tax purposes) can also choose not to be treated as having disposed of any non-TCP, provided they give security for any tax they would otherwise have had to pay.

Example

X. moved to Country B from Canada in 1990. At the time of the move, X. owned an apartment building situated in Country B, and one in Canada. Each property cost X. $75,000 (or the equivalent), and each had a fair market value in 1990 of $100,000. X. sold both buildings in 1995, for $125,000 each.

For Canadian tax purposes X. was treated as having disposed of and reacquired the building in Country B for $100,000 before ceasing to be a resident of Canada. Canada thus taxed the $18,750 taxable capital gain ($25,000 capital gain X 75%) on the Country B building that accrued while X. was a resident of Canada. But Canada will not tax X.'s post-departure gain on that building. Since the Canadian building is taxable Canadian property, X. was not treated as having disposed of it in 1990. Canada will tax the full $37,500 taxable capital gain ($50,000 capital gain X 75%) on that building.

Special rules

Several special rules apply to particular kinds of taxpayer. A Canadian trust, for example, may distribute property to a non-resident beneficiary: the rules treat that distribution as a fair market value disposition, except where the property is taxable Canadian property. Other rules treat property that is acquired on a tax-deferred ("rollover") basis in exchange for TCP as being itself TCP.

3. What will change

The most important changes proposed in this Notice of Ways and Means Motion relate to individuals (including trusts) who emigrate from Canada. First, the class of properties treated as having been sold on emigration will be expanded. Anyone who ceases to be a resident of Canada after October 1, 1996 will be treated as having disposed of and reacquired all property (including taxable Canadian property) other than Canadian real estate, Canadian business property and the properties described in current Income Tax Act subparagraphs 128.1(4)(b)(iii) (pension and other rights), (v) (certain property of short-term residents) and (vi) (stock options). This will have the effect of determining the emigrant's tax liability in respect of any accrued capital gains. The emigrant can either pay the tax immediately, or give Revenue Canada security for paying it later (without interest charges), when the property is actually sold.

Second, all individual emigrants who own property with a total value of more than $25,000 will be required to report their property holdings to Revenue Canada. An exception will be made for any personal-use property (a defined term that includes clothing, household goods, cars, etc.) with a value of less than $10,000. This reporting requirement will apply to all individuals who have left Canada after 1995, and will take the form of a schedule or similar document to be included with those persons' income tax returns for the year they left Canada.

Other changes include:

- Extending to 5 years the period for determining whether certain shares and partnership and trusts interests are taxable Canadian property. This will make it more difficult for non-resident taxpayers to manipulate the status of a share or interest by changing the investment mix of the corporation, partnership or trust.
- Deeming a disposition and reacquisition at fair market value of any capital property (such as shares or bonds held on capital account) that ceases to be used by a non-resident person in carrying on a business in Canada. This will reduce the opportunity for non-residents to avoid Canadian tax by changing the use of a property to benefit from tax-treaty protection.
- Deeming a disposition at fair market value of all property (other than Canadian real estate) distributed by a trust to a non-resident beneficiary (with the trust and beneficiary being provided the right to provide security for the tax otherwise payable), and clarifying that taxable Canadian property distributed by a trust remains taxable Canadian property to the beneficiary.

- Clarifying that property may be taxable Canadian property not only to non-residents, but also to residents of Canada. This will ensure that a number of aspects of the migration rules work as intended.

4. Next steps

The Government invites comment on these proposals. Comments may be directed to the Minister of Finance.

Questions and Answers on Proposed Changes

Background

Q. What events led up to the changes being announced today?

A. The Auditor-General raised certain concerns about a 1991 tax ruling [see ATR-70 — ed.] that allowed a taxpayer to transfer property out of Canada without being subject to immediate capital gains tax in Canada. The Finance Committee examined the issue and found that Revenue Canada's interpretation of the law as it stood in 1991 was legally correct in the context of a system that taxed emigrating Canadians on their property gains only when they ultimately sold the property.

The Committee noted, however, that Canada's right to impose tax on former Canadian residents was sometimes limited under the terms of its tax treaties with other countries. It thus recommended that the system be changed to ensure that Canadian tax be assessed at the point when property is transferred to persons living outside of Canada, or when the individual or trust owning the property leaves the country. These changes implement this recommendation.

Structure of previous system

Q. How did the system work that was in effect before today?

A. The previous system provided that gains on property owned by individuals or trusts when they moved from Canada were either taxable in Canada or, if a tax treaty applied, in their new country of residence, when the property was ultimately sold. Similar rules applied to trust distributions to foreign beneficiaries: either the trust would pay tax when the property was distributed, or the beneficiaries would be liable to tax in Canada or in their country of residence.

Effect on trusts

Q. Will the proposed changes affect transactions like that highlighted in the Auditor General's report?

A. Yes. These changes will ensure that gains on property held in a trust are subject to Canadian tax when the trust moves, or the property is distributed to people who live outside Canada.

The transaction described in the Auditor General's report involved the distribution of Canadian property by a trust to a beneficiary that lived in another country. If that transaction were to take place today, any gains accruing on the property while it was owned by the trust would be subject to Canadian tax — with the tax being payable either on distribution or, where security is provided, when the property is sold by the beneficiary.

Family trusts

Q. Does this eliminate the tax advantages associated with family trusts?

A. This issue is not specifically about family trusts. Any remaining tax advantages that family trusts may have had were eliminated by the changes announced in the 1995 budget.

The changes being made today concern all taxpayers who move out of Canada or who, in the case of trusts, distribute property to persons living outside of Canada. In effect, the changes ensure that gains arising while living in Canada will ultimately be subject to Canadian tax, and they apply equally to individuals and trusts. (Corporations are already taxable on such gains when they leave Canada, and this rule is to be maintained.)

Timing of announcement

Q. Should these changes have been announced before today?

A. The government has acted as soon as it was reasonable to do so. In May of this year the Auditor-General identified a concern with the tax system. The government immediately referred the issue to the Finance Committee, which examined the issue and issued its report two weeks ago. The government is now proposing to implement the Committee's recommendations, with effect as of today.

Retroactivity

Q. Why isn't the government giving these changes retroactive effect?

A. It would be inappropriate and unfair to tell taxpayers that their past actions will now be retroactively taxed under a set of rules that they couldn't have known about before today. The changes announced today reflect a new policy — one that taxpayers will have to take into account in their future affairs.

Consultation

Q. Will there be an opportunity for taxpayers to comment on the proposed changes before they are implemented?

A. The changes are reasonable and responsive to the concerns that the Auditor-General and the Finance Committee raised but, as is the case with all income tax proposals, taxpayers' comments on the effect of these changes are invited and will be taken into account in developing the implementing legislation.

Effect of proposed changes

Q. What do these changes do?

A. Most significantly, the changes will treat individuals and trusts who leave Canada as having realized any gains accrued on their property up to that point in time. They will have the option of paying the tax on those gains when they file their tax return for the year they leave Canada or, by providing security to Revenue Canada, can defer their payment until the property is sold.

In other words, the proposed changes ensure that all emigrants from Canada — including trusts — will pay Canadian tax on any capital gains that have accrued in Canada up to the time of departure. They also apply to ensure that trust distributions to foreign beneficiaries will be subject to Canadian tax. In both cases, the Canadian tax can be paid immediately, or security can be provided to Revenue Canada to pay the tax, without interest charges, when the property is actually sold.

The proposals also include several technical changes:

- to tighten the rules for taxing non-residents of Canada on gains they realize from the sale of interests in partnerships and trusts which have significant interests in Canadian property;
- to ensure that Canadian tax is payable with respect to gains from property used by non-residents in carrying on business in Canada;
- to confirm that the term "taxable Canadian property" applies to Canadian residents as well as non-residents, thus ensuring that a resident planning to leave Canada can't limit the gains which are taxable in Canada by exchanging TCP for non-TCP before he leaves;
- to clarify that Canadian tax with respect to gains on trust property distributed to non-resident beneficiaries before today will (subject to Canada's tax treaties) be taxed in the beneficiaries' hands if the trust wasn't liable to tax itself; and
- to require all individuals and trusts leaving Canada to file an information return reporting all of the significant assets they hold at the point of departure.

Compliance concerns

Q. What new obligations will this place on taxpayers?

A. To minimize any immediate tax burden that these changes might otherwise create, the emigrant will be able to pay the tax when the property is actually sold, provided the emigrant gives Revenue Canada security for that later payment. No interest will be charged on the tax liability during this period.

The changes will also require departing Canadians to file an information return listing all of their significant assets. This return, which in the case of individuals is required to be filed by April 30 of the year following the year of departure, will not be required for taxpayers having property with a total value of less than $25,000.

Department of Finance press release, October 2, 1996:
Taxpayer Migration Rules to be Tightened

Finance Minister Paul Martin today announced major changes to the income tax rules for people who leave Canada. These changes will ensure that taxpayers who move or transfer property from Canada will remain subject to Canadian tax on their gains from such property.

"Canada already has one of the strictest systems in the world when it comes to taxpayer migration," the Minister said. "This will make our system even better."

The Minister noted that the Auditor General had raised the issue of Canada's taxpayer migration rules in his report earlier this year, and that the House of Commons Finance Committee recently made several recommendations for improving Canada's tax system in this regard. Today's changes follow the recommendations of the Committee majority.

"From now on, all emigrants — including trusts — will be subject to Canadian tax on any gains that have accrued up to the time of departure, other than on Canadian real estate and a limited group of other assets — which Canada always retains the right to tax," Mr. Martin explained. "The only people this will not apply to are people who have been in Canada only temporarily."

Until now, emigrants have not been taxed on gains on certain Canadian property at the time they leave. Instead, either Canada or (where a tax treaty applies) their new country taxes those gains when they actually dispose of the property.

People who leave Canada under the new rules will calculate their tax as though they had disposed of all their property other than Canadian real estate and certain other assets. They can either pay the tax immediately or give Revenue Canada security for paying it at a later date.

In addition, today's changes implement the technical recommendations put forward by the Committee, including those regarding trusts that distribute property to non-residents.

A copy of the Notice of Ways and Means Motion tabled by the Minister today, accompanied by the Minister's remarks on tabling, is attached. A technical background note and a series of questions and answers relating to the changes are also attached.

Proposed Addition — 128.1(5)–(7)

(5) Instalment interest — If an individual is deemed by subsection (4) to have disposed of a property at any time in a taxation year, in applying sections 155, 156 and 156.1 and subsections 161(2), (4) and (4.01) and any regulations made for the purposes of those provisions, the individual's total taxes payable under this Part and Part I.1 for the year are deemed to be the lesser of

(a) the individual's total taxes payable under this Part and Part I.1 for the year, determined before taking into consideration the specified future tax consequences for the year, and

(b) the amount that would be determined under paragraph (a) if subsection (4) did not apply to the individual for the year.

Technical Notes: Sections 155 and 156 of the Act set out rules for computing the instalment obligations of individuals for a taxation year. Subsections 161(2), (4) and (4.01) of the Act set out rules for computing the interest payable by taxpayers on any deficiency in instalments made during a taxation year.

New subsection 128.1(5) of the Act provides a special rule for computing the instalment and instalment interest obligation of an individual for a taxation year in which the individual ceases to be a resident of Canada. This subsection applies to exclude, in computing an individual's liability for instalments for the year, the tax attributable to any deemed disposition under paragraph 128.1(4)(b), where that paragraph has the effect of increasing the individual's total tax payable under Parts I and I.1 for the year.

New subsection 128.1(5) applies to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996.

(6) Returning former resident — If an individual (other than a trust) becomes resident in Canada at a particular time in a taxation year, the individual was resident in Canada before the particular time, and the period that ends at the particular time and that began at the last time (in this subsection referred to as the "emigration time"), before the particular time, at which the individual ceased to be resident in Canada does not exceed 60 months,

(a) subject to paragraph (b), if the individual so elects in the individual's return of income for the year, paragraphs (4)(b) and (c) do not apply to the individual's cessation of residence at the emigration time in respect of all properties that were taxable Canadian properties of the individual throughout the period;

(b) where, if a property in respect of which an election under paragraph (a) is made had been acquired by the individual at the emigration time at a cost equal to its fair market value at the emigration time and had been disposed of by the individual immediately before the particular time for proceeds of disposition equal to its fair market value immediately before the particular time, the application of subsection 40(3.7) would reduce the amount that would, but for subsection 40(3.7) and this subsection, be the individual's loss from the disposition,

(i) the individual is deemed to have disposed of the property at the time of disposition (within the meaning assigned by paragraph (4)(b)) in respect of the emigration time for proceeds of disposition equal to the total of

(A) the adjusted cost base to the individual of the property immediately before the time of disposition, and

(B) the amount, if any, by which that reduction exceeds the lesser of

(I) the adjusted cost base to the individual of the property immediately before the time of disposition, and

(II) the amount, if any, which the individual specifies for the purposes of this paragraph in the election under paragraph (a) in respect of the property,

(ii) the individual is deemed to have reacquired the property at the emigration time at a cost equal to the amount, if any, by which the amount determined under clause (i)(A) exceeds the lesser of that reduction and the amount specified by the individual under subclause (i)(B)(II), and

(iii) for the purposes of section 119, the individual is deemed to have disposed of the property immediately before the particular time;

(c) if the individual so elects in the individual's return of income for the year, in respect of each property that the individual owned throughout the period and is deemed by paragraph (1)(b) to have disposed of on becoming resident in Canada, notwithstanding paragraphs (4)(b) and (1)(c) the individual's proceeds of disposition at the time of disposition (within the meaning assigned by paragraph (4)(b)), and the individual's cost of acquiring the property at the particular time are deemed to be those proceeds and that cost, determined without reference to this paragraph, minus the least of

(i) the amount that would, but for this paragraph, have been the individual's gain from the disposition of the property deemed by paragraph (4)(b) to have occurred,

(ii) the fair market value of the property at the particular time, and

(iii) the amount that the individual specifies in respect of the property in the election; and

(d) notwithstanding subsections 152(4) to (5), such assessment of tax payable under the Act by the individual for any taxation year that is before the year that includes the particular time and that is not before the year that includes the emigration time shall be made as is necessary to take an election under this subsection into account, except that no such assessment shall affect the computation of interest payable under this Act to or by a taxpayer in respect of any period that is before the day on which the taxpayer's return of income for the taxation year that includes the particular time is filed.

Technical Notes: New subsection 128.1(6) of the Act provides special rules that apply to an individual (other than a trust) who re-establishes Canadian residence at a particular time that is within 60 months of the individual's date of emigration (the "emigration time"). These rules allow the individual in effect to unwind the application of paragraphs 128.1(4)(b) and (c) to properties that were owned by the individual throughout the period beginning at the emigration time and ending at the particular time.

In broad terms, new subsection 128.1(6) means that an emigrant who returns to Canada within 5 years of emigration will no longer be treated as having realized accrued gains on departure. Four points should be noted about these rules. First, because there is no certain way of knowing which emigrants will return to Canada, this rule does not directly affect the obligations that arise on emigration. Rather, the rule does allow the returning individual retrospectively to modify the obligations. As a practical matter, it is expected that most individuals who plan to return to Canada will use the security provisions of section 220.1 to defer payment of any tax arising as a result of emigration. In that case, the main effect of new subsection 128.1(6) will be to allow the security to be given back intact to the returning emigrant.

Second, these rules do not affect any interest or penalties owing by an individual, including interest and penalties levied on taxes in respect of the individual's emigration, calculated without reference to the rule.

Third, these rules include features designed to prevent surplus-stripping. Without these features, a resident of Canada could use a temporary period of non-residence to extract, as dividends subject only to low-rate withholding tax, value that represents accrued gains.

Fourth, the rules require separate elections in respect of taxable Canadian property (paragraph (a)) and other property (paragraph (c)). The effects of the elections differ: the paragraph (a) election removes taxable Canadian properties from the deemed disposition and reacquisition on emigration, subject to special rules in paragraph (b); while the paragraph (c) election adjusts the emigration proceeds of disposition and the returning adjusted cost base of the other properties. Each election covers all property of the given sort, but the returning individual may choose to make one election and not the other.

Paragraph 128.1(6)(a) allows the individual to make an election in respect of property that was taxable Canadian property at the emigration time and throughout the period that the individual was non-resident. The effect of making this election is that paragraphs 128.1(4)(b) and (c) do not apply in respect of all such properties of the individual for the taxation year that ended at the emigration time.

Where an individual has made an election under paragraph 128.1(6)(a), paragraph 128.1(6)(b) provides special surplus-stripping rules in respect of the property covered by the election. The basic purpose of paragraph (b) is to ensure that gains that accrued before emigration from Canada, and that have been extracted in the form of dividends during the individual's residence abroad, are subject to Canadian tax as gains.

Paragraph (b) applies, in respect of a paragraph (a) taxable Canadian property, where two conditions are met:

— a loss has accrued on the property during the individual's period of non-residence — that is, the property's fair market value immediately before the individual becomes resident is less than its fair market value when the individual left Canada; and — if the individual had acquired the property for its fair market value on emigration, and disposed of the property immediately before becoming resident, new subsection 40(3.7) (which applies to current and former non-resident individuals a version of the stop-loss rules in section 112 of the Act) would reduce the loss.

Where these conditions are met, paragraph (b) has four related effects. First, it treats the individual as having disposed of the property immediately before emigration, notwithstanding the paragraph (a) election. Second, it establishes the individual's proceeds of disposition of the property at that time, as the total of:

(A) the adjusted cost base of the property on emigration; and

(B) the amount, if any, by which the notional loss reduction under subsection 40(3.7) exceeds the lesser of (I) the adjusted cost base on emigration, and (II) an amount chosen by the individual.

Third, paragraph (b) treats the individual as having reacquired the property on emigration, at a cost equal to the excess, if any, of the property's adjusted cost base on emigration (the (A) and (B)(I) amount above) over the lesser of the notional loss reduction under subsection 40(3.7) and the amount chosen by the individual in (B)(II) above.

The practical result of the second and third effects is that the income (in this case, dividends) that gives rise to the notional subsection 40(3.7) loss reduction is recharacterized as gains. Those gains are, subject to election, distributed between the post-return period and the deemed disposition on emigration.

Fourth, paragraph (b) treats the individual, for the purposes of new section 119 of the Act, as having disposed of the property immediately before returning to Canada. This ensures that appropriate credit is given for any tax withheld under Part XIII of the Act on the income that triggered the application of paragraph (b).

EXAMPLE — 128.1(6)(c)

Noah emigrates from Canada in 1999. Noah owns shares of a foreign corporation. When Noah leaves, the shares have a fair market value of $25,000 and an adjusted cost base of $15,000, for an accrued gain of $10,000. In 2001, Noah returns to Canada. At that time the shares have a fair market value of $80,000. Noah chooses to take advantage of the election in paragraph 128.1(6)(c) to control the tax consequences of ceasing to be a Canadian resident. Because he had a capital loss in 1999 of $7,000 from another source, Noah is content to realize a $7,000 capital gain on emigration, but he does not want to realize the other $3,000 accrued gain. Noah therefore chooses an elected amount of $3,000.

Noah's proceeds of disposition under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) are deemed to be $22,000, being the proceeds of disposition that would otherwise be determined under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) ($25,000) minus the least of:

- the amount that would have been Noah's gain on the shares under 128.1(4)(b) had this paragraph not applied ($10,000);
- the fair market value of the property at the particular time ($80,000); and
- the elected amount specified ($3,000).

Noah thus reduces his emigration-year gain to $7,000. The same $3,000 that reduces Noah's emigration proceeds is also subtracted from his reacquisition cost under paragraph 128.1(1)(c) ($80,000), leaving his new adjusted cost base in respect of the property $77,000. The property thus has a latent gain of $3,000 at the time Noah re-establishes Canadian residence.

Noah could have deferred tax on the full $10,000 gain that accrued before emigration, by increasing his elected amount in respect of the shares to $10,000.

New subsection 128.1(6) applies to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996. The subsection provides that, notwithstanding the Act's ordinary rules governing assessments, any necessary assessments of tax will be made in order to take account of the effect of new paragraph 128.1(6)(c).

EXAMPLE — 128.1(6)(b)

Marie emigrates from Canada in 1999. Marie is the majority shareholder of a Canadian-controlled private corporation (CCPC) when she leaves Canada. The shares, which are taxable Canadian property to Marie, have a fair market value (FMV) at that time of $50,000 and an adjusted cost base (ACB) of $15,000, for a latent gain of $35,000. Marie receives $35,000 of dividends from the CCPC in 2000. In 2001, Marie returns to Canada. At that time, the shares have a FMV of $15,000. Marie uses the election in subsection 128.1(6) to minimize the tax consequences of her earlier emigration from Canada.

If Marie actually disposed of the shares immediately before re-establishing Canadian residence, subsection 40(3.7) of the Act would reduce her loss. Therefore, paragraph 128.1(6)(b) applies in respect of the shares.

Under paragraph 128.1(6)(b), Marie is treated as having disposed of and reacquired the shares on emigration. Assuming she elects $10,000, Marie's emigration proceeds of disposition are deemed to be $40,000, being the emigration ACB ($15,000) plus the difference between the subsection 40(3.7) reduction ($35,000) and the ACB/specified amount ($10,000). Marie thus realizes a $25,000 capital gain in the emigration year.

Marie's reacquisition cost is deemed to be $5,000, being the original ACB ($15,000) minus the lesser of the subsection 40(3.7) reduction ($35,000) and the specified amount ($10,000). Since the shares have a FMV of $15,000, Marie will eventually realize a gain of $10,000 (subject to other adjustments to ACB and FMV).

The result is that Marie's $25,000 gain on departure and remaining $10,000 latent gain equal the $35,000 she extracted in the form of dividends. The full $35,000 will thus be realized as capital gains, and section 119 will give Marie credit for any withholding tax she paid on the dividends.

Marie could have altered the timing of her capital gains on the shares. For example, if she had elected an amount of $5,000 under paragraph (a) in respect of the property, Marie's emigration proceeds of disposition would have been $45,000 ($15,000 ACB + ($35,000 40(3.7) reduction - $5,000 elected amount)), giving an emigration gain of $30,000. This would have been balanced by an increase in Marie's reacquisition cost from $5,000 to $10,000, which in turn would reduce the eventual gain Marie will realize on the shares.

New paragraph 128.1(6)(c) allows the returning individual to make an election, in respect of each property the individual owned at the emigration time and throughout the non-resident period that is subject to a deemed acquisition on immigration, under paragraph 128.1(1)(c) of the Act. In general, this describes property other than taxable Canadian property. The election adjusts, on a property-by-property basis, both the proceeds of disposition that were deemed to arise as a consequence of the deemed disposition in paragraph 128.1(4)(b) on the individual's earlier emigration, and the deemed acquisition cost under paragraph 128.1(1)(c).

Specifically, each of these amounts is adjusted by subtracting the least of:

- the amount that would otherwise be the individual's gain on the property as a result of the deemed disposition in paragraph 128.1(4)(b),
- the fair market value of the property immediately before the individual becomes resident in Canada, and
- any other amount specified by the individual.

As a result of these adjustments, the returning individual can defer Canadian tax on any gain that had accrued before emigration, while still protecting from Canadian tax gains that accrued during periods of non-residence.

Related Provisions: 40(3.7) — Stop-loss rule applicable while non-resident; 128.3 — Shares acquired on rollover deemed to be same shares for 128.1(6); 161(7)(a)(xi), 164(5)(h.02), 164(5.1) — Effect of carryback of loss; 220.1 — deferral of payment of tax on emigration.

(7) Post-emigration loss — If an individual (other than a trust)

(a) was deemed by paragraph (4)(b) to have disposed of a capital property at any particular time after October 1, 1996,

(b) has disposed of the property at a later time at which the property was a taxable Canadian property of the individual, and

(c) so elects in the individual's return of income for the taxation year that includes the later time, there shall, except for the purposes of paragraph (4)(c), be deducted from the individual's proceeds of disposition of the property at the particular time, and added to the individual's proceeds of disposition of the property at the later time, an amount equal to the least of

(d) the amount specified in respect of the property in the election,

(e) the amount that would, but for the election, be the individual's gain from the disposition of the property at the particular time, and

(f) the amount that would be the individual's loss from the disposition of the property at the later time, if the loss were determined having reference to every other provision of this Act including, for greater certainty, subsection 40(3.7) and section 112, but without reference to the election.

Related Provisions: 128.3 — Shares acquired on rollover deemed to be same shares for 128.1(6); 161(7)(a)(xi), 164(5)(h.02), 164(5.1) — Effect of carryback of loss; 152(6)(f.1) — Minister required to reassess past year to allow unused foreign tax credit.

Technical Notes: New subsection 128.1(7) of the Act provides relief to an individual (other than a trust) who disposes of a taxable Canadian property, after having emigrated from Canada, for proceeds that are less than the deemed proceeds that arose under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) in respect of the property when the individual emigrated.

Under subsection 128.1(7) the individual may elect to reduce the proceeds of disposition that were deemed to arise under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) in respect of a property by the least of:

- an amount specified by the individual;
- the amount that would be the individual's gain from the deemed disposition of the property under paragraph 128.1(4)(b), but for this subsection; and
- the amount that would be the individual's loss from the disposition of the property at the time the property is actually disposed of, if the loss were determined with reference to every other provision in the Act (including the stop-loss rules in subsection 40(3.7) and section 112 of the Act) but this subsection.

The same amount is added to the individual's proceeds of disposition realized at the time of actual disposition.

EXAMPLE — 128.1(7)

Odile emigrates from Canada in 1999, owning a capital interest in a Canadian trust. The interest has a fair market value at that time of $150,000 and an adjusted cost base of $40,000, for a latent gain of $110,000 on departure. Odile's tax is assessed on that basis, and she posts security for the tax.

In 2001, Odile sells her trust interest for $60,000. Since Odile has realized a smaller gain than assumed in her tax assessment on emigration, she elects under subsection 128.1(7) to reduce the gain she was deemed to have realized when she emigrated.

To obtain the maximum benefit from the subsection, Odile specifies an amount of $90,000 in respect of the election. Her proceeds of disposition at the emigration time are deemed to be $60,000, being the proceeds of disposition that would otherwise be determined under paragraph 128.1(4)(b) ($150,000) minus the least of:

- the amount specified ($90,000);
- the amount that would have been her taxable gain in respect of the trust interest under 128.1(4)(b) had this paragraph not applied ($110,000); and
- the amount that would have been her loss on actual disposition of the trust interest had this paragraph not applied ($150,000 - $60,000 = $90,000).

The same $90,000 amount is added to Odile's proceeds of the actual disposition of the trust interest. The result is that, in respect of the trust interest, Odile is treated as having realized a $20,000 gain in 1999, and no gain or loss on the actual disposition of the property in 2001.

It should be noted that the election in subsection 128.1(7) does not affect any interest or penalties owing by the individual at the time of making the election, including interest and penalties levied on taxes in respect of the property, calculated without reference to the subsection.

A consequential amendment to subsection 152(6) of the Act ensures that any necessary assessments of tax will be made in order to take account of the effect of new subsection 128.1(7).

New subsection 128.1(7) applies to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), subsec. 17(5), will add subsecs. 128.1(5) to (7), subsecs. (5) and (7) applicable to changes in residence that occur after October 1, 1996, and subsec. (6) applicable to individuals who cease to be resident in Canada after October 1, 1996.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 19, will add s. 128.3, applicable after October 1, 1996.

(c) notwithstanding subsection (11), the acquisition of shares of the corporation's capital stock by the estate from the deceased person is deemed to be a permitted acquisition; and

(d) the estate is deemed not to be a trust for the purposes of subparagraph (9)(a)(i) of this Act and paragraphs (b) and (e) of the definition "specified shareholder" in subsection 248(1) of the Income Tax Act.

(11) The definitions in this subsection apply in subsections (4) to (10) [of the said c. 19 (above)] and this subsection.

"permitted acquisition" means an acquisition by a particular person of a share of a class of the capital stock of a corporation that was

(a) held, at each particular time after June 20, 1996 and before the time at which the particular person acquired it, or

(b) issued after June 20, 1996 by the corporation as a stock dividend and held, at each particular time after the time the share was issued and before the time at which the particular person acquired it, by the particular person or by a person who was related to the particular person throughout the period that begins at the end of June 20, 1996 and ends at the particular time if, immediately after the time at which the particular person acquires the share, the total percentage of the issued shares of that class held by the particular person and persons related to the particular person (or in the case of acquisitions before August 14, 1998, by the particular person and persons with whom the particular person did not deal at arm's length immediately after the acquisition) does not exceed the permitted percentage for the particular person in respect of that class of shares.

"permitted percentage" for a particular person in respect of any class of shares of the capital stock of a corporation means

(a) in respect of acquisitions of shares before August 14, 1998, the greatest percentage that is the total percentage of the issued shares of a class of the capital stock of the corporation held at the end of June 20, 1996 by the particular person and persons with whom the particular person did not at that time deal at arm's length; and

(b) in any other case, the greater of

(i) the greatest percentage that is the total percentage of the issued shares of a class of the capital stock of the corporation held at the end of June 20, 1996 by the particular person and persons related to the particular person, and

(ii) the greatest percentage that is the total percentage of the issued shares of a class of the capital stock of the corporation held at the beginning of August 14, 1998 by the particular person and persons related to the particular person.

"related persons" and persons related to each other have, for purposes other than applying the definitions "permitted acquisition" and "permitted percentage" in respect of acquisitions of shares before August 14, 1998, the meaning that would be assigned by section 251 of the Act if paragraph 251(2)(a) of the Act were read as follows:

(10) The definitions in this subsection apply in subsections (3) [i.e., the application above] to (9) and this subsection.

"mortgage lender" means a particular corporation where the ordinary business of

(a) the particular corporation, or

(b) a corporation (other than a mortgage investment corporation) or partnership affiliated with the particular corporation includes the holding of debts that are secured, whether by mortgage or in any other manner, on houses (as defined in section 2 of the National Housing Act) or on property included within a housing project (as defined in that section).

"newly related persons" means persons who are related to each other and who became so related after January 14, 1998.

"permitted acquisition" means an acquisition by a particular person of a share of a class of the capital stock of a corporation that was

(a) held, at each particular time after January 14, 1998 and before the time at which the particular person acquired it, or

(b) issued after January 14, 1998 by the corporation as a stock dividend and held, at each particular time after the time the share was issued and before the time at which the particular person acquired it, by the particular person or by a person who was related to the particular person throughout the period that began at the beginning of January 15, 1998 and that ends at the particular time if, immediately after the time at which the particular person acquires the share, the percentage of the issued shares of that class held by the particular person and persons related to the particular person (or in the case of acquisitions before August 14, 1998, by the particular person and persons with whom the particular person did not deal at arm's length immediately after the acquisition) does not exceed the permitted percentage for the particular person in respect of that class of shares.

"permitted percentage" for a particular person in respect of a class of shares of the capital stock of a corporation means

(a) in respect of acquisitions of shares before August 14, 1998, the percentage of the issued shares of that class held at the end of January 14, 1998 by the particular person and persons with whom the particular person did not at that time deal at arm's length; and

(b) in any other case, the greater of

(i) the percentage of the issued shares of that class held at the end of January 14, 1998 by the particular person and persons related at that time to the particular person, and

(ii) the percentage of the issued shares of that class held at the beginning of August 14, 1998 by the particular person and persons related at that time to the particular person.

"related persons" and persons related to each other have, for purposes other than applying the definitions "permitted acquisition" and "permitted percentage" in respect of acquisitions of shares before August 14, 1998, the meaning that would be assigned by section 251 of the Act if paragraph 251(2)(a) of the Act were read as follows:

(a) an individual and

(i) the individual's child (as defined in subsection 70(10)) who is under 19 years of age, or

(ii) the individual's spouse;

Proposed Amendment — 131(8.1)(a)

(a) throughout the period beginning on the later of February 21, 1990 and the day of its incorporation and ending at that time, all or substantially all of its property consisted of property other than property that would be taxable Canadian property if the definition "taxable Canadian property" in subsection 248(1) were read without reference to paragraph (b) of that definition; or

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (taxpayer migration), s. 20, will amend para. 131(8.1)(a) to read as above, applicable after October 1, 1996.

Technical Notes: Section 131 of the Act sets out rules relating to the taxation of mutual fund corporations and their shareholders.

Subsection 131(8.1) of the Act provides that a corporation is not a mutual fund corporation after a particular time if, at that time, it is reasonable to conclude that the corporation was established or maintained primarily for the benefit of non-resident persons. Two conditions provide exceptions to this rule. The first of these conditions, which is set out in paragraph 131(8.1)(a), is met if, throughout the period that started on February 21, 1990 (or if later, the date of incorporation) and that ends at the particular time, all or substantially all of the corporation's property consisted of property other than Canadian real property, options therein and other taxable Canadian property.

Paragraph 131(8.1)(a) is replaced, with effect after October 1, 1996, with new wording that incorporates changes in the definition of "taxable Canadian property" and the movement of that definition from paragraph 115(1)(b) of the Act to subsection 248(1) of the Act.

(b) it has not issued a share (other than a share issued as a stock dividend) of its capital stock after February 20, 1990 and before that time to a person who, after reasonable inquiry, it had reason to believe was non-resident, except where the share was issued to that person under an agreement in writing entered into before February 21, 1990.

(a) in respect of its 1972 taxation year, 91.25% of the amount so determined; and

(b) in respect of its 1973 taxation year, the total of

(i) 91.25% of that proportion of the amount so determined that the number of days in that portion of the year that is before 1973 is of the number of days in the whole year, and

(ii) 100% of that proportion of the amount so determined that the number of days in that portion of the year that is after 1972 is of the number of days in the whole year.

(a) for the purposes of subparagraphs 129(3)(a)(i) and (ii), the amount deducted under paragraph 111(1)(b) from the corporation's income for each taxation year ending after that time shall be deemed to be nil;

(b) the definition "aggregate investment income" in subsection 129(4) shall be read without reference to paragraph (a) of that definition in its application to taxation years that end after that time;

(7) Idem — Where, at any time, it can reasonably be considered that a trust, having regard to all the circumstances, including the terms and conditions of the units of the trust, was established or is maintained primarily for the benefit of non-resident persons, the trust shall be deemed not to be a mutual fund trust after that time unless

(a) throughout the period beginning on the later of February 21, 1990 and the day of its creation and ending at that time, all or substantially all of its property consisted of property other than

(i) real property situated in Canada (including any interest therein or option in respect thereof, whether or not the property is in existence), and

(ii) property that would, if

(A) the trust were non-resident,

(B) paragraph 115(1)(b) were read without reference to subparagraphs 115(1)(b)(i) and (ii), and

(C) the property were disposed of,

be taxable Canadian property of the trust; or

(b) it has not issued a unit (other than a unit issued to a person in satisfaction of the person's right under the trust to an amount referred to in paragraph 104(13)(c)) of the trust after February 20, 1990 and before that time to a person who, after reasonable inquiry, it had reason to believe was non-resident, except where the unit was issued to that person under an agreement in writing entered into before February 21, 1990.

Proposed Amendment — 132(7)(a), (b)

(a) throughout the period beginning on the later of February 21, 1990 and the day of its creation and ending at that time, all or substantially all of its property consisted of property other than property that would be taxable Canadian property if the definition "taxable Canadian property" in subsection 248(1) were read without reference to paragraph (b) of that definition; or

(b) it has not issued any unit (other than a unit issued to a person as a payment, or in satisfaction of the person's right to enforce payment, out of the trust's unrecognized gains balance or income, determined before the application of subsection 104(6)) of the trust after February 20, 1990 and before that time to a person who, after reasonable inquiry, it had reason to believe was non-resident, except where the unit was issued to that person under an agreement in writing entered into before February 21, 1990.

Application: The December 23, 1998 draft legislation (trusts), s. 16, will amend paras. 132(7)(a) and (b) to read as above, para. (a) applicable after October 1, 1996 and para. (b) applicable after February 20, 1990.

Technical Notes: Under subsection 132(7) of the Act, a trust does not qualify as a mutual fund trust in certain cases where it is reasonable to conclude that the trust was established primarily for the benefit of non-resident persons. The purpose of this amendment was to discourage the use of mutual fund trusts as an intermediary through which non-residents could invest in Canadian real estate and other taxable Canadian property without recognizing any gains on the disposition of units in trust. However, grandfathering was intended to be provided in the case of a trust which did not issue units after February 20, 1990 otherwise than as a capitalization of an income distribution.

Subsection 132(7) is amended to change references to "taxable Canadian property" in section 115 to parallel references to the new definition in subsection 248(1). This amendment applies after October 1, 1996.

Subsection 132(7) is also amended to ensure that the grandfathering rules operate as described above. Amended subsection 132(7) also contemplates units issued through a crystallization of a payment that is made out of the exempt portion of a trust's net capital gains (which is referred to as the trust's "unrecognized gains balance", as newly defined in subsection 248(1)). This amendment applies after February 20, 1990.

138.1 (1) Rules relating to segregated funds — In respect of life insurance policies for which all or any portion of an insurer's reserves vary in amount depending on the fair market value of a specified group of properties (in this section referred to as a "segregated fund"), for the purposes of this Part, the following rules apply:

(a) an inter vivos trust (in this section referred to as the "related segregated fund trust") is deemed to be created at the time that is the later of

(i) the day that the segregated fund is created, and

(ii) the day on which the insurer's 1978 taxation year commences, and to continue in existence throughout the period during which the fund determines any portion of the benefits under those policies that vary in amount depending on the fair market value of the property in the segregated fund (in this section referred to as "segregated fund policies");

(b) property that has been allocated to and that remains a part of the segregated fund, and any income that has accrued on that property is deemed to be the property and income of the related segregated fund trust and not to be the property and income of the insurer;

(c) the insurer is deemed to be

(i) the trustee who has ownership or control of the related segregated fund trust property,

(ii) a resident of Canada in respect of the related segregated fund trust property used or held by it in the course of carrying on the insurer's life insurance business in Canada, and

(iii) a non-resident of Canada in respect of the related segregated fund trust property not used or held by it in the course of carrying on the insurer's life insurance business in Canada;

(d) where at a particular time there is property in the segregated fund that was not funded with premiums paid under a segregated fund policy,

(i) the insurer is deemed to have an interest in the related segregated fund trust that is not in respect of any particular property or source of income, and

(ii) the cost at any time of that interest to the insurer is deemed to be the total of

(A) for property of the trust at that time allocated by the insurer to the segregated fund prior to 1978, the amount that would be its adjusted cost base to the insurer if the interest had been a capital property at all relevant times prior to 1978 and if the rules in this section had been applicable for the taxation years after 1971 and before 1978, and

(B) for property of the trust at that time allocated by the insurer to the segregated fund after 1977, the fair market value of the property at the time it was last allocated to the segregated fund by the insurer;

(e) where at any particular time there is property in the segregated fund that was funded with a portion of the premiums paid before that time under a segregated fund policy,

(i) the respective segregated fund policyholder is deemed to have an interest in the related segregated fund trust that is not in respect of any particular property or source of income,

(ii) the cost of that interest is deemed to be the amount that is the total of

(A) the amount that would be its adjusted cost base to the insurer at December 31, 1977 if the interest had been a capital property at all relevant times prior to 1978 and if the rules in this section (if subsection (3) were read without reference to the expressions "or capital loss" and "or loss") had been applicable for taxation years after 1971 and before 1978, and

(B) the total of amounts each of which is that portion of a premium paid before that time and after the day referred to in subparagraph (a)(ii) under a segregated fund policy that was or is to be used by the insurer to fund property allocated to the segregated fund (other than the portion of the premium that is an acquisition fee), and

(iii) the portion of a premium included in a segregated fund is deemed not to be an amount paid in respect of a premium under the policy;

(f) the income of the related segregated fund trust is deemed for the purposes of subsections 104(6), (13) and (24) to be an amount that has become payable in the year to the beneficiaries under the segregated fund trust and the amount therefor in respect of any particular beneficiary is equal to the amount determined by reference to the terms and conditions of the segregated fund policy;

(g) where at a particular time the fair market value of property transferred by the insurer to the segregated fund results in an increase at that time in the portion of the insurer's reserves for a segregated fund policy held by a policyholder that vary with the fair market value of the segregated fund and a decrease in the portion of its reserves for the policy that do not so vary, the amount of that increase shall,

(i) for the purpose of the determination of H in the definition "adjusted cost basis" in subsection 148(9), be deemed to be proceeds of disposition that the policyholder became entitled to receive at that time,

(ii) for the purpose of computing the adjusted cost base to the policyholder of the policyholder's interest in the related segregated fund trust, be added at that time to the cost to the policyholder of that interest, and

(iii) for the purpose of computing the insurer's income, be deemed to be a payment under the terms and conditions of the policy at that time;

(h) where at a particular time the fair market value of property transferred by the insurer from the segregated fund results in an increase at that time in the portion of the insurer's reserves for a segregated fund policy that do not vary with the fair market value of the segregated fund and a decrease in the portion of its reserves for the policy that so vary, the amount of that increase shall, for the purpose of calculating the insurer's income, be deemed to be a premium received by the insurer at that time;

(i) where at a particular time the policyholder of a segregated fund policy disposes of all or a portion of the policyholder's interest in the related segregated fund trust, that proportion of the amount, if any, by which the acquisition fee with respect to the particular policy exceeds the total of amounts each of which is an amount determined under this paragraph with respect to the particular policy before that time, that

(i) the fair market value of the interest disposed of at that time

is of

(ii) the fair market value of the policyholder's interest in the particular segregated fund trust immediately before that time, is deemed to be a capital loss of the related segregated fund trust that reduces the policyholder's benefits under the particular policy by that amount for the purposes of subsection (3);

(j) the obligations of an insurer in respect of a benefit that is payable under a segregated fund policy, the amount of which benefit varies with the fair market value of the segregated fund at the time the benefit becomes payable, are deemed to be obligations of the trustee under the related segregated fund trust and not of the insurer and any amount received by the policyholder or that the policyholder became entitled to receive at any particular time in a year in respect of those obligations is deemed to be proceeds from the disposition of an interest in the related segregated fund trust;

(k) a reference to "the terms and conditions of the trust arrangement" in section 104 or subsection 127.2(3) is deemed to include a reference to the terms and conditions of the related segregated fund policy and the trustee is deemed to have designated the amounts referred to in that section in accordance with those terms and conditions; and

(l) where at any time an insurer acquires a share as a first registered holder thereof and allocates the share to a related segregated fund trust, the trust shall be deemed to have acquired the share at that time as the first registered holder thereof for the purpose of computing its share-purchase tax credit and the insurer shall be deemed not to have acquired the share for the purpose of computing its share-purchase tax credit.

(a) the fair market value of the property on that day,

(b) the adjusted cost base to the trust of the property on that day, or

(c) an amount that is neither greater than the greater of nor less than the lesser of the amounts determined under paragraphs (a) and (b), whichever is designated by the trustee, and to have been reacquired by the trust immediately thereafter at a cost equal to those proceeds, and where the trustee of a related segregated fund trust has made such an election, the following rules apply:

(d) the amount of any capital gain or capital loss resulting from the deemed disposition shall be allocated by the trustee to any policyholder withdrawing all or part of the policyholder's interest in the policyholder's policy at that time to the extent that the amount of the policyholder's benefits under the policy at that time is affected by the capital gain or capital loss in respect of property held by the related segregated fund trust at that time,

(b) a transfer from the segregated fund that cannot reasonably be regarded as an amount required to fund a mortality or maturity benefit other than an annual administration fee or charge, or,

Demutualization of Insurance Corporations

Technical Notes: New section 139.1 of the Act contains rules that apply where a mutual insurance corporation converts into a corporation with share capital — a process referred to as demutualization. In general terms, the rules treat policyholders as if they were shareholders participating in the reorganization of the share capital of a corporation. In particular, the rules enable policyholders to receive shares in place of their ownership interest, with no immediate tax consequences. Cash payments and other non-share benefits are treated as taxable corporate dividends paid by the insurer.

Section 139.1 is structured as follows:

- Subsection 139.1(1) defines expressions used in the section.
- Subsections 139.1(2) and (3) set out a number of application rules for the purposes of the section.
- Subsection 139.1(4) sets out various consequences of a demutualization, including the treatment of benefits received by policyholders pursuant to a demutualization.
- Subsections 139.1(5) and (6) contain rules relating to the paid-up capital of shares issued by an insurance corporation or a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization of the insurance corporation.
- Subsection 139.1(7) provides that certain policy dividends payable pursuant to a demutualization are not considered to be policy dividends.
- Subsection 139.1(8) deems a person who receives a demutualization benefit that is a "specified insurance benefit" to have paid a premium to the insurer.
- Subsection 139.1(9) assigns a cost to a demutualization benefit other than a "specified insurance benefit".
- Subsection 139.1(10) excludes demutualization benefits from the application of the shareholder benefit rule in subsection 15(1).
- Subsection 139.1(11), in conjunction with subsection 139.1(12), ensures that the provision of a demutualization benefit does not produce an inappropriate result under the rules relating to RRSPs, RRIFs, DPSPs and pension plans.
- Subsection 139.1(13) contains rules that apply with respect to employee-funded group insurance policies.
- Subsection 139.1(14) provides, in general, that the acquisition of shares by a holding corporation of an insurance corporation on the demutualization of the insurance corporation will not be considered to result in an acquisition of control of the insurance corporation.

Section 139.1 applies to any arrangement by which the demutualization of an insurance corporation is implemented. Under one arrangement, the documents constituting the corporation would be amended to provide for share capital and shares would then be issued to policyholders (and possibly former policyholders). Another arrangement involves the issuance of shares to a holding corporation which, in turn, would issue its shares to policyholders. A third arrangement would be to issue the shares of the insurance corporation to a holding corporation that is a mutual corporation controlled by policyholders of the insurance corporation. A demutualization could also be effected by a mutual insurance corporation merging with a corporation that has share capital.

Section 139.1 applies to the demutualization of both resident and non-resident insurers, and it applies to both resident and non-resident policyholders.

Section 139.1 applies to transactions that occur after December 15, 1998.

Revenue Canada information sheet, March 16, 1999: Demutualization

The Department of Finance Canada has introduced legislation that will allow large, federally regulated, mutual life insurance companies to demutualize. Demutualization is a process that occurs when mutual companies convert to stock companies.

The following large mutual life insurance companies have announced their intention to develop demutualization plans:

- The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada
- The Manufactures Life Insurance Company
- Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada
- The Canada Life Assurance Company

When a company demutualizes, its total value is allocated to eligible policyholders in exchange for their ownership rights and interests in the mutual company. The policyholders can choose to receive demutualization benefits as shares or dividends.

Demutualization — Questions and Answers

We have developed the following questions and answers to help you understand the tax consequences of receiving a demutualization benefit.

Q How will I be taxed on my demutualization benefits?

A If you receive a share, there is no immediate tax consequence. The adjusted cost base of the share is zero. However, when you sell or dispose of the share, you may have a capital gain.

If you receive a benefit other than a share (e.g., cash), it will be taxed as a dividend. You will have to include the taxable amount of the dividend in your income. The taxable amount of the dividend is 125% of the amount of the dividend you receive. You will also qualify for the dividend tax credit.

Q How do I report my income from demutualization?

A If you receive a share, you do not have to report any income until you dispose of the share. When you dispose of the share, you may have a capital gain. This gain is the difference in the proceeds of disposition and the adjusted cost base of the share. The proceeds of disposition is generally the selling price of the share. Since the adjusted cost base of a share you receive because of demutualization is zero, your capital gain will equal your proceeds of disposition. Seventy-five per cent of the gain is taxable, and you have to include this amount in your income for the year you dispose of the share.

If you receive a dividend, include the taxable amount of the dividend in your income for the year that you received it. You also can claim the dividend tax credit.

Q When do I pay tax on my demutualization benefits?

A When you pay tax will depend on the type of benefit you receive. If you receive a dividend, you have to pay tax on this dividend in the year you receive it. For example, if you receive the dividend in 1999, you report it on your 1999 return.

If you receive a share, you do not pay tax until the year that you actually sell or dispose of the share.

Q How much tax will I have to pay?

A The amount of tax that you have to pay will depend on your tax situation in the year you receive the dividend or sell the share. There is no flat rate of tax on these demutualization benefits.

Q What are the tax consequences of receiving demutualized benefits?

A When you report dividend income or a taxable capital gain, your net and taxable income will increase. This may reduce benefits and credits that you may receive, such as the Canada Child Tax Benefit, the goods and services tax/harmonized sales tax credit, provincial/territorial family benefits, provincial/territorial tax credits, and some non-refundable tax credits, such as the age amount, spousal amount, and medical expenses. It may also increase your federal and provincial taxes and you may have to pay minimum tax. You may also have to repay part or all of any Employment Insurance or Old Age Security benefits you received in the year.

To find out more about income-tested benefits, minimum tax, and repaying Employment Insurance or Old Age Security benefits, see the General Income Tax Guide.

Q Do I need a special form to report demutualization benefits?

A If you receive a share, you will have to report your capital gain when you dispose of the share. To do this, you will need to complete Schedule 3, Capital Gains (or Losses), and file it with your return. This schedule is included in the forms booklet that accompanies your General Income Tax Guide. Our guide called Capital Gains also includes information on how to complete Schedule 3.

If you receive a dividend, your insurance company will send you a T5 slip, Statement of Investment Income. The slip will indicate the taxable amount of dividend income paid to you. It will also indicate the amount of the dividend tax credit that you can claim. You can find reporting instructions on the back of the T5 slip.

Q Is there a guide that explains how to report this income?

A You can find information on how to report dividend income and capital gains in the General Income Tax Guide. Our guide called Capital Gains has more detailed information on capital gains.

Q Will I receive a reminder that I have to report this income?

A If you receive a dividend, your insurance company will send you a T5 slip, Statement of Investment Income. You should get this slip by the end of February following the year in which you receive the dividend.

If you receive a share, no information slip will be sent to you. It will be your responsibility to calculate and report the capital gain on your return for the year in which you dispose of your share.

Q The tax return that was sent to me does not have the lines or the schedules to report this income. Can I still use the return?

A No. You should use the General Income Tax and Benefit Return.

Q I received my demutualized benefits in shares. Later, I bought more shares in my insurance company. Do special rules apply?

A Yes. Shares in the same company are considered to be identical properties, and special rules apply when you calculate the adjusted cost base. To find out about these special rules, see our guide called Capital Gains.

Q I am planning to give my shares to a charity. Do I still have to pay tax?

A Special rules may apply if you donate shares to a registered charity. For more information, see our guide called Capital Gains.

Q If I give the shares to my son or grandchild, will I have to pay tax?

A If you give your shares to a relative as a gift, we consider you to have sold the shares. For more information, see our guide called Capital Gains.

Q I make instalment payments. Will demutualization benefits affect my instalments?

A Demutualization payments may affect your instalment amounts. For more information, see our pamphlet called Paying Your Income Tax by Instalments.

139.1 (1) Definitions — The definitions in this subsection apply in this section and section 139.2.

"cash" of a corporation means the total of

(a) the total amount of the corporation's money (other than money the fair market value of which exceeds its stated value as legal tender);

(b) deposits (within the meaning assigned by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act or with a bank) of such money standing to the credit of the corporation; and

(c) the fair market value of bonds, debentures, notes or similar obligations described in clause 212(1)(b)(ii)(C) that are owned by the corporation.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(1) of the Act defines several expressions used in section 139.1.

[The definition "cash"] is discussed in the commentary below on subsection 139.1(14).

"conversion benefit" means a benefit received in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation because of an interest, before the demutualization, of any person in an insurance policy to which the insurance corporation has been a party.

Technical Notes: A "conversion benefit" is defined as a benefit that is received in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation because of an interest of any person in an insurance policy to which the insurance corporation has been a party. If a "conversion benefit" is a "taxable conversion benefit" (as described in the commentary below), the recipient of the benefit is generally treated under paragraph 139.1(4)(f) as having received a dividend from the insurance corporation. Subsections 139.1(2) and (3) set out a number of rules determining when a benefit is considered to be received.

Related Provisions: 139.1(2), (3) — Determining when benefit received; 139.1(10) — Conversion benefit is not a shareholder benefit. See also Related Provisions under "taxable conversion benefit".

"demutualization" means the conversion of an insurance corporation from a mutual corporation into a corporation that is not a mutual corporation.

Technical Notes: A "demutualization" is defined as the conversion of a mutual insurance corporation into a non-mutual insurance corporation — that is, into an insurance corporation with share capital, where shareholders have the voting rights and the right to the residual assets of the corporation on dissolution.

Related Provisions: 139.1(4) — Effect of demutualization.

"holding corporation" means a corporation that

(a) in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, has issued shares of its capital stock to stakeholders; and

(b) owns shares of the capital stock of the insurance corporation acquired in connection with the demutualization that entitle it to 90% or more of the votes that could be cast in respect of shares under all circumstances at an annual meeting of

(i) shareholders of the insurance corporation, or

(ii) shareholders of the insurance corporation and holders of insurance policies to which the insurance corporation is a party.

Technical Notes: A "holding corporation" with respect to an insurance corporation is a corporation that has, in connection with the demutualization of the insurance corporation, issued shares to stakeholders and that owns shares of the insurance corporation acquired in connection with the demutualization that entitle it to 90% or more of shareholder votes. The shares of the insurance corporation may be acquired directly from the insurance corporation, or they may be acquired from the stakeholders.

Related Provisions: 139.1(4)(e) — Cost to holding corporation of shares acquired on demutualization; 141(3) — Holding corporation deemed to be public corporation.

"mutual holding corporation" in respect of an insurance corporation means a mutual corporation established to hold shares of the capital stock of the insurance corporation, where the only persons entitled to vote at an annual meeting of the mutual corporation are policyholders of the insurance corporation.

Technical Notes: A "mutual holding corporation" in respect of an insurance corporation is a mutual corporation which satisfies two conditions: (i) the corporation was established to hold shares of the insurance corporation, and (ii) the only persons entitled to vote at an annual meeting of the mutual corporation are policyholders of the insurance corporation. The expression is used in the definitions "ownership rights", "stakeholder" and "taxable conversion benefit", paragraph 139.1(4)(d) and section 139.2.

Related Provisions: 139.1(4)(d) — Receipt of ownership rights in MHC on demutualization; 139.2 — Deemed dividend on distribution of property by MHC.

"ownership rights" means rights that are

(a) similar to rights attached to shares of the capital stock of a corporation; and

(b) held by a person in respect of a mutual insurance corporation or mutual holding corporation because of an interest of any person in an insurance policy to which that corporation (or, if that corporation is a mutual holding corporation, an insurance corporation in respect of which that corporation is the mutual holding corporation) is a party.

Technical Notes: "Ownership rights" in a mutual insurance corporation are rights in respect of that corporation that are analogous to shareholder rights and are held because of an interest of any person in an insurance policy to which that corporation is a party. Examples of ownership rights include voting rights and the right to share in the residual assets of the mutual insurance corporation on its dissolution. While ownership rights are normally held by policyholders, a demutualization may involve the transfer of ownership rights to a holding corporation as a preliminary step to the issuance of shares by the insurance corporation. Under paragraphs 139.1(4)(a) and (d), shares acquired in exchange for ownership rights or for the alteration or dilution of ownership rights are received on a rollover basis at a deemed cost of nil.

A mutual holding corporation, as defined in subsection 139.1(1), holds the shares of the capital stock of an insurance corporation. "Ownership rights" in respect of the mutual holding corporation are held because of the interest of any person in an insurance policy to which the insurance corporation is a party. "Ownership rights" in respect of a mutual holding corporation are referred in paragraph (c) of the definition "taxable conversion benefit" and paragraph 139.1(4)(d). These rights would normally include the right to vote at meetings of the mutual holding corporation and the right to share in the residual assets of the mutual holding corporation on its dissolution.

Related Provisions: 139.1(4)(a), (d) — Rollover where shares acquired in exchange for ownership rights.

"person" includes a partnership.

Technical Notes: A "person" is defined to include a partnership.

"share" of the capital stock of a corporation includes a right granted by the corporation to acquire a share of its capital stock.

Technical Notes: A "share" of the capital stock of a corporation is defined to include a right granted by the corporation to acquire a share of its capital stock. It is intended to include a right of a contingent nature.

"specified insurance benefit" means a taxable conversion benefit that is

(a) an enhancement of benefits under an insurance policy;

(b) an issuance of an insurance policy;

(c) an undertaking by an insurance corporation of an obligation to pay a policy dividend; or

(d) a reduction in the amount of premiums that would otherwise be payable under an insurance policy.

Technical Notes: This definition is discussed in the commentary below on subsection 139.1(7).

Related Provisions: 139.1(8) — Effect of stakeholder receiving specified insurance benefit.

"stakeholder" means a person who is entitled to receive or who has received a conversion benefit but, in respect of the demutualization of an insurance corporation, does not include a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization or a mutual holding corporation in respect of the insurance corporation.

Technical Notes: The expression "stakeholder" is defined with reference to a demutualization of an insurance corporation. A "stakeholder" is a person entitled to a conversion benefit in connection with the demutualization, other than a holding corporation or a mutual holding corporation. The expressions "holding corporation" and "mutual holding corporation" are defined elsewhere in subsection 139.1(1).

Related Provisions: 139.1(4) — Effect of demutualization on stakeholder.

"taxable conversion benefit" means a conversion benefit received by a stakeholder in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, other than a conversion benefit that is

(a) a share of a class of the capital stock of the corporation;

(b) a share of a class of the capital stock of a corporation that is or becomes a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization; or

(c) an ownership right in a mutual holding corporation in respect of the insurance corporation.

Technical Notes: A "taxable conversion benefit" is any "conversion benefit" (described in the commentary above) received by a stakeholder in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, other than certain excluded conversion benefits. Under paragraph 139.1(4)(f), the receipt by a stakeholder of a taxable conversion benefit is generally treated as a deemed dividend for the stakeholder. Benefits excluded for this purpose are:

- shares of an insurance corporation,
- shares of a holding corporation, and
- ownership rights in a mutual holding corporation, as described in the commentary above on the definition "ownership rights".

By virtue of the definition of "share" in subsection 139.1(1), rights to acquire shares are also excluded from being taxable conversion benefits.

The following, if provided in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, are examples of taxable conversion benefits:

- a cash payment,
- a policy dividend (see paragraphs 139.1(3)(c) to (f) and subsection 139.1(7)),
- an enhancement of benefits under an insurance policy,
- a new insurance policy, and
- a reduction in future premiums under an insurance policy (see paragraph 139.1(3)(b)).

Related Provisions: 139.1(2), (3) — Determining when benefit received; 139.1(4)(f) — TCB deemed to be a dividend; 139.1(7) — Policy dividend that is TCB deemed not to be policy dividend; 139.1(9) — Cost of TCB.

(2) Rules of general application — For the purposes of this section,

(a) subject to paragraphs (b) and (c), if in providing a benefit in respect of a demutualization, a corporation becomes obligated, either absolutely or contingently, to make or arrange a payment, the person to whom the undertaking to make or arrange the payment was given is considered to have received a benefit

(i) as a consequence of the undertaking of the obligation, and

(ii) not as a consequence of the making of the payment;

(b) where, in providing a benefit in respect of a demutualization, a corporation makes a payment (other than a payment, made pursuant to the terms of an insurance policy, that is not a policy dividend) at any time on or before the day that is 13 months after the demutualization (or such later day as is acceptable to the Minister),

(i) the recipient of the payment is considered to have received a benefit as a consequence of the making of the payment, and

(ii) no benefit is considered to have been received as a consequence of the undertaking of an obligation, that is either contingent or absolute, to make or arrange the payment;

(c) where a corporation's obligation to make or arrange a payment in connection with a demutualization ceases on or before the day that is 13 months after the demutualization (or a later day that is acceptable to the Minister) and without the payment being made in whole or in part, no benefit is considered to have been received as a consequence of the undertaking of the obligation unless the payment was to be a payment (other than a policy dividend) pursuant to the terms of an insurance policy;

(d) the time at which a stakeholder is considered to receive a benefit in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation is,

(i) where the benefit is a payment made at or before the time of demutualization or is a payment described in paragraph (b), the time at which the payment is made, and

(ii) in any other case, the time of demutualization of the corporation;

(e) the time at which an insurance corporation is considered to demutualize is the time at which it first issues a share of its capital stock (other than shares of its capital stock issued by it when it was a mutual corporation if the corporation did not cease to be a mutual corporation because of the issue of those shares); and

(f) the value of a benefit received by a stakeholder is the fair market value of the benefit at the time the stakeholder receives the benefit.

Technical Notes: Subsection 139.1(2) of the Act sets out a number of general rules of application for the purposes of section 139.1. Rules of application to deal with special cases are set out in subsection 139.1(3).

New paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b) of the Act contain rules that apply where a corporation becomes obligated (absolutely or contingently) to make or arrange a payment in providing a benefit in respect of a demutualization. These rules are relevant where taxable conversion benefits are provided on the demutualization of an insurance corporation. They are necessary because there are two transactions which might otherwise be considered to give rise to the receipt of benefits: the undertaking of an obligation to provide benefits, and the payment pursuant to the obligation.

Paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b) specify when the benefit received consists of the undertaking of the obligation to make the payment, and when it consists of the actual payment. They apply together with paragraphs 139.1(2)(d) and (f) to determine when a taxable conversion benefit is considered to be received and the value of the benefit. Where the undertaking of an obligation constitutes the benefit, the benefit is considered to be received at the time of demutualization, and its value is its fair market value at that time. Where the making of a payment constitutes the benefit, the benefit is considered to be received when the payment is made, and the value of the benefit is equal to the amount of the payment.

Paragraph 139.1(2)(a) applies unless paragraph 139.1(2)(b) or (c) applies. Where, in connection with a demutualization, a corporation becomes obligated to make or arrange a payment, the benefit is considered to consist of the undertaking of the obligation and not of the making of the payment. The obligation may be of an absolute or contingent nature. In the event that this obligation results in the deemed receipt under paragraph 139.1(4)(f) by a taxpayer of a dividend as of the time of the demutualization, the corporation is obliged to report the deemed receipt of the dividend to Revenue Canada. However, it is intended that potential reporting obligations pursuant to paragraph 139.1(2)(a) will be suspended in the period during which it is reasonable to consider that paragraph 139.1(2)(b) or (c) may ultimately override the application of paragraph 139.1(2)(a).

Paragraph 139.1(2)(b) applies, except as noted below, if within 13 months after a demutualization, a corporation makes a payment in connection with the demutualization. In this case, the benefit consists of the making of the payment and not the undertaking of the obligation to make or arrange the payment. The Minister of National Revenue has the discretion to allow paragraph 139.1(2)(b) to apply to payments made more than 13 months after a demutualization.

Paragraph 139.1(2)(b) does not apply with respect to payments (other than policy dividends) under an insurance policy. For example, if the amount payable under life insurance policies is increased in connection with a demutualization, paragraph 139.1(2)(b) will not apply to any payments made pursuant to the increase. Paragraph 139.1(2)(a) will therefore apply, and the benefit will consist of the policy improvements. These improvements will have to be valued for the purpose of determining the amount of the taxable conversion benefit.

The following example illustrates the application of paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b). Assume that, in connection with its demutualization, an insurer undertakes to pay a special policy dividend. If the special dividend is paid to a particular policyholder within 13 months after the demutualization, the policyholder will be considered to have received a taxable conversion benefit when the dividend is paid. If the dividend is payable to another policyholder more than 13 months after the demutualization, that policyholder's taxable conversion benefit will consist of the right, which may be contingent, to receive the dividend (assuming that the Minister has not extended the 13-month period during which paragraph 139.1(2)(b) applies). In this case, whether or not the dividend is ultimately paid, the policyholder will be considered to have received a taxable conversion benefit.

Paragraph 139.1(2)(c) applies in the unusual event that a stakeholder to whom an undertaking has been provided in connection with a demutualization does not receive any payment pursuant to the undertaking and the undertaking expires, within the 13-month period following the demutualization (or within a longer period acceptable to the Minister). Where this is the case, no benefit is considered to have been received in respect of the undertaking. Paragraph 139.1(2)(c) does not, however, apply in connection with an undertaking of an obligation to make or arrange a payment pursuant to the terms of an insurance policy, unless the payment was to be a policy dividend.

New paragraph 139.1(2)(d) of the Act specifies the time at which a stakeholder is considered to receive a taxable conversion benefit in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation. This paragraph is relevant primarily for paragraph 139.1(4)(f), which sets out the tax treatment of taxable conversion benefits. If the benefit consists of a payment, it is considered to be received when the payment is made. If the benefit is an undertaking to make a payment, an agreement to reduce policy premiums or any other type of taxable conversion benefit, it is considered to be received at the time of demutualization. Paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b) specify when a conversion benefit consists of a payment and when it consists of an undertaking to make a payment. In general terms, where a payment is to be made within 13 months after a demutualization, the payment is the benefit. Otherwise, the undertaking is the benefit.

Several provisions in section 139.1 of the Act refer to the time at which an insurance corporation demutualizes. New paragraph 139.1(2)(e) provides that this time is generally the time at which the insurance corporation first issues a share of its capital stock.

Paragraph 139.1(2)(e) also contemplates the possibility that an insurance corporation could issue non-voting shares of its capital stock before demutualization, in which case it could remain a mutual corporation until demutualization. The issue of these shares is ignored for the purpose of determining the time of demutualization.

Under paragraph 139.1(4)(f) of the Act, the tax treatment of a taxable conversion benefit is based on the value of the benefit. New paragraph 139.1(2)(f) provides that the value of a benefit is the fair market value of the benefit at the time it is received by the stakeholder. Paragraph 139.1(2)(d) specifies the time at which a stakeholder is considered to receive a taxable conversion benefit.

Related Provisions: 49.1 — Acquisition in satisfaction of obligation deemed not to be a disposition.

(3) Special cases — For the purposes of this section,

(a) where benefits under an insurance policy are enhanced in connection with a demutualization, the value of the enhancement is deemed to be a benefit received by the policyholder and not by any other person;

(b) where premiums payable under an insurance policy to an insurance corporation are reduced in connection with a demutualization, the policyholder is deemed, as a consequence of the undertaking to reduce the premiums, to have received a benefit equal to the present value at the time of demutualization of the additional premiums that would have been payable if the premiums had not been reduced in connection with the demutualization;

(c) the payment of a policy dividend by an insurance corporation or an undertaking of an obligation by the corporation to pay a policy dividend is considered to be in connection with the demutualization of the corporation only to the extent that

(i) the policy dividend is referred to in the demutualization proposal sent by the corporation to stakeholders,

(ii) the obligation to make the payment is contingent on stakeholder approval for the demutualization, and

(iii) the payment or undertaking cannot reasonably be considered to have been made or given, as the case may be, to ensure that policy dividends are not adversely affected by the demutualization;

(d) except for the purposes of paragraphs (c), (e) and (f), where part of a policy dividend is a conversion benefit in respect of the demutualization of an insurance corporation and part of it is not, each part of the dividend is deemed to be a policy dividend that is separate from the other part;

(e) a policy dividend includes an amount that is in lieu of payment of, or in satisfaction of, a policy dividend;

(f) the payment of a policy dividend includes the application of the policy dividend to pay a premium under an insurance policy or to repay a policy loan; and

(g) where the demutualization of an insurance corporation is effected by the merger of the corporation with one or more other corporations to form one corporate entity, that entity is deemed to be the same corporation as, and a continuation of, the insurance corporation.

Technical Notes: New paragraph 139.1(3)(a) of the Act applies where benefits are enhanced under an insurance policy in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation. The enhancement is considered to be a benefit that is received by the policyholder. This rule clarifies that the taxable conversion benefit resulting from a policy enhancement is a benefit of the policyholder even though, for example, any payment pursuant to the enhancement may be made to another person. Paragraph 139.1(3)(a) applies to all policy enhancements, whether implemented by policy amendment, by the addition of riders, or in any other way.

New paragraph 139.1(3)(b) of the Act contains rules that apply where premiums payable under an insurance policy are reduced in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation. It is intended to ensure that a reduction in premiums is considered to be a single benefit, rather than a series of benefits that are provided each time the policyholder pays a reduced amount of premium. The rules provide that the policyholder is, in these circumstances, deemed to receive a benefit equal to the present value (at the time of demutualization) of the additional premiums that would otherwise be payable. The present value would be determined taking into account the probability that the policy will be in existence on each premium payment date.

New paragraph 139.1(3)(c) of the Act provides that a policy dividend is considered to be provided in connection with a demutualization only to the extent that — the demutualization proposal sent to stakeholders refers to the dividend, — the payment of the dividend is contingent on stakeholder approval for the demutualization, and — the dividend was not paid pursuant to an undertaking given to ensure that the demutualization would not have an adverse impact on policy dividends.

The purpose of paragraph 139.1(3)(c) is to provide an administratively workable distinction between normal policy dividends, on the one hand, and extraordinary policy dividends payable in connection with a demutualization.

Paragraph 139.1(3)(c) also applies to undertakings to pay policy dividends. An undertaking is considered to be provided in connection with a demutualization only to the extent that the undertaking is to pay a dividend that meets the requirements described above.

The reason for paragraph 139.1(3)(c) applying to both policy dividends and undertakings to pay policy dividends is that, in some cases, the payment of a dividend constitutes the conversion benefit while in other cases it is the undertaking to pay the dividend that is the benefit. For further detail in this regard, see the commentary on paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b).

Paragraph 139.1(3)(d) contains a rule that applies if only part of a policy dividend is a benefit provided in connection with a demutualization. It deems that part of the policy dividend to be a separate dividend from the other part of the policy dividend. This rule is relevant for subsection 139.1(7), which provides that a policy dividend is not treated as such (other than for the purposes of section 139.1) if the payment of the dividend is a taxable conversion benefit.

Paragraph 139.1(3)(e) of the Act clarifies that a reference to a policy dividend includes an amount that is in lieu of payment of, or in satisfaction of, a policy dividend.

Paragraph 139.1(3)(f) clarifies that the payment of a policy dividend includes the application of a policy dividend to pay premiums or to repay a policy loan. If a policy dividend is applied as described above (or is otherwise paid) within 13 months of the demutualization, paragraph 139.1(2)(b) and subsection 139.1(7) generally ensure that the policy dividend is not treated as such, other than for the purposes of section 139.1. As a consequence, paragraph 148(2)(a) would not apply in these circumstances.

New paragraph 139.1(3)(g) of the Act applies where an insurance corporation demutualizes by merging with one or more other corporations. The corporate entity formed by the merger is deemed, for the purposes of section 139.1, to be the same corporation as, and a continuation of, the mutual insurance corporation. This rule applies whether the insurance corporation is a resident or non-resident corporation.

Related Provisions: 139.1(2)(e) — Determining time of demutualization; 87(2.2) — Amalgamation of insurers.

(4) Consequences of demutualization — Where a particular insurance corporation has undertaken to demutualize,

(a) each of the income, loss, capital gain and capital loss of a taxpayer, from the disposition, alteration or dilution of the taxpayer's ownership rights in the particular corporation as a result of the demutualization, is deemed to be nil;

(b) no amount paid or payable to a stakeholder in connection with the disposition, alteration or dilution of the stakeholder's ownership rights in the particular corporation is an eligible capital expenditure;

(c) no election may be made under subsection 85(1) or (2) in respect of ownership rights in the particular corporation;

(d) where the consideration given by a person for a share of the capital stock of the particular corporation or a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization (or for particular ownership rights in a mutual holding corporation in respect of the particular corporation) includes the transfer, surrender, alteration or dilution of ownership rights in the particular corporation, the cost of the share (or the particular ownership rights) to the person is deemed to be nil;

(e) where a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization acquires, in connection with the demutualization, a share of the capital stock of the particular corporation from the particular corporation and issues a share of its own capital stock to a stakeholder as consideration for the share of the capital stock of the particular corporation, the cost to the holding corporation of the share of the capital stock of the particular corporation is deemed to be nil;

(f) where at any time a stakeholder receives a taxable conversion benefit and subsection (12) does not apply,

(i) the corporation that conferred the benefit is deemed to have paid a dividend at that time on shares of its capital stock equal to the value of the benefit, and

(ii) the benefit received by the stakeholder is deemed to be a dividend received by the stakeholder at that time; and

(g) for the purposes of Part I, where a dividend is deemed by paragraph (f) to have been paid by a non-resident corporation, that corporation is deemed in respect of the payment of the dividend to be a corporation resident in Canada that is a taxable Canadian corporation unless any amount is claimed under section 126 in respect of tax on the dividend.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(4) of the Act sets out many of the tax consequences that apply where an insurance corporation has undertaken to demutualize.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(a) of the Act provides that the disposition, alteration or dilution of ownership rights in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation does not give rise to any gain or loss.

Paragraph 139.1(4)(a) would apply, for example, where stakeholders receive shares of the insurance corporation or of a holding corporation on the extinguishment of their ownership rights. It would also apply to the transfer of ownership rights by stakeholders to a holding corporation in return for shares of the holding corporation, and to the subsequent surrender of those rights by the holding corporation for shares of the insurance corporation.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(b) of the Act clarifies that an amount paid or payable to a stakeholder in connection with the disposition, alteration or dilution of the stakeholder's ownership interest is not an eligible capital expenditure. This amount is intended not to be deductible in computing the payer's income.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(c) of the Act provides that an election cannot be made under subsection 85(1) or (2) in respect of the disposition of ownership rights in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation. The rules in subsection 139.1(4) are expected to achieve substantially the same result as elections under those subsections, without the need for any elections to be filed.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(d) of the Act applies where, in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, a person acquires shares of the corporation, or of a holding corporation, for consideration that includes the transfer, surrender, alteration or dilution of ownership rights in the insurance corporation. Paragraph 139.1(4)(d) provides that the shares have a cost of nil to the person. The paragraph is not limited to stakeholders. It would apply if a holding corporation acquires ownership rights from stakeholders and then surrenders the rights.

Paragraph 139.1(4)(d) also applies with respect to the cost of a right granted by the insurance corporation, or the holding corporation, to acquire a share of the corporation. This follows from the expanded definition of "share" in subsection 139.1(1).

If an insurance corporation issues shares to its stakeholders in return for the surrender of their ownership rights, and the stakeholders subsequently transfer the shares to a holding corporation in exchange for shares of the holding corporation, paragraph 139.1(4)(d) will not apply with respect to the acquisition of shares from the holding corporation. Only the first transaction involves an acquisition of shares for consideration that includes the surrender of ownership rights.

Paragraph 139.1(4)(d) also applies where, in connection with a demutualization, a stakeholder acquires ownership rights in a mutual holding corporation. These ownership rights are deemed to have a cost of nil. For further detail, see the commentary on the definition "ownership rights" in subsection 139.1(1).

Paragraph 139.1(4)(e) of the Act applies where a demutualization is effected by having an insurance corporation issue shares to a holding corporation and the holding corporation issue its own shares to stakeholders. The paragraph deems the cost of the shares of the insurance corporation acquired by the holding corporation to be nil.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(f) of the Act sets out the tax treatment of a taxable conversion benefit received at any time by a stakeholder in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation. It provides that the corporation that conferred the benefit (i.e., generally the insurance corporation or a corporation holding the shares of the insurance corporation) is considered to have paid, and the stakeholder is considered to have received, a dividend at that time on shares of that corporation in an amount equal to the value of the benefit. The rules in the Act applicable to corporate dividends will therefore apply with respect to the benefit. In certain cases where the insurer is non-resident, paragraph 139.1(4)(g) deems the insurer to be a resident corporation and a taxable Canadian corporation with respect to the dividend.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(f) does not, however, apply in circumstances to which subsection 139.1(12) applies. See, in this regard, the commentary below on subsection 139.1(12).

Subsection 139.1(2) contains rules regarding the time at which a benefit is considered to be received and the determination of the value of the benefit. For a description of the rules, see the commentary on that subsection.

New paragraph 139.1(4)(g) of the Act applies where a non-resident insurer confers a taxable conversion benefit on a stakeholder. For the purposes of Part I, any resulting dividend is deemed to be paid by a corporation resident in Canada that is a taxable Canadian corporation. As a consequence, if the stakeholder is a resident individual, the dividend gross-up and tax credit mechanism will apply. If the stakeholder is a resident corporation, the inter-corporate dividend deduction will generally be available, and Part IV tax may apply. However, paragraph 139.1(4)(g) does not apply if a deduction under section 126 in respect of any foreign tax on the dividend is claimed.

Related Provisions: 82(1), 90 — Inclusion in income of deemed dividend; 139 — Mutualization proposal; 139.1(2)(f) — Value of benefit; 212(2) — Non-resident withholding tax on deemed dividend.

(5) Paid-up capital — insurance corporation — Where an insurance corporation resident in Canada has demutualized, in computing the paid-up capital at any particular time in respect of a class of shares of the capital stock of the corporation,

(a) there shall be deducted the total of all amounts each of which would, but for this subsection, have been deemed by subsection 84(1) to have been paid at or before the particular time by the corporation as a dividend on a share of that class because of an increase in paid-up capital (determined without reference to this subsection) in connection with the demutualization; and

(b) there shall be added the amount, if any, by which

(i) the total of all amounts each of which is deemed by subsection 84(3), (4) or (4.1) to be a dividend on shares of that class paid by the corporation before the particular time

exceeds

(ii) the total of all amounts each of which would be deemed by subsection 84(3), (4) or (4.1) to be a dividend on shares of that class paid by the corporation before the particular time, if this Act were read without reference to this subsection.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(5) of the Act sets out rules that apply to the determination of the paid-up capital of shares of an insurance corporation resident in Canada that has demutualized. The purpose of the subsection is to prevent stakeholders from being deemed by subsection 84(1) to receive dividends because of an increase in stated capital on the issuance of shares as a conversion benefit. Instead, a deemed dividend will arise at the time, if ever, when the shares are redeemed or acquired by the insurance corporation.

Paragraph 139.1(5)(a) deducts from the paid-up capital of a class of shares of the insurer the total amount that subsection 84(1) would, if paragraph 139.1(5)(a) were not applicable, deem to have been paid as dividends on shares of that class in connection with the demutualization. Subsection 84(1) deems a dividend to have been paid when the paid-up capital of a class of shares is increased, other than in specified ways. For example, if surplus or other amounts are converted to stated capital on the demutualization of the insurer, paragraph 139.1(5)(a) will deduct a corresponding amount from paid-up capital.

Paragraph 139.1(5)(b) provides for an addition to the paid-up capital of a class of shares where paragraph 139.1(5)(a) has reduced the paid-up capital of the class. The amount that is added at any time is equal to the total dividends deemed by subsections 84(3), (4) and (4.1) to have been paid on shares of the class before that time minus the dividends that would have been deemed to have been paid if subsection 139.1(5) had not applied to the class of shares. In other words, paragraph 139.1(5)(b) reverses the reduction in paid-up capital to the extent that additional deemed dividends have arisen because of the reduction.

EXAMPLE

On its demutualization, Insurance Co. issues 100 shares each to its 1,000 policyholders and adds $1 million to its stated capital. Subsequently, Insurance Co. redeems 40,000 shares for $14 per share, reducing its stated capital by $10 per share. What is the paid-up capital of that class of shares after the redemption of the shares?

Without reference to subsection 139.1(5), the paid-up capital is $600,000 ($1 million – (40,000 × $10)). Paragraph 139.1(5)(a) requires $1 million to be subtracted in computing paid-up capital, which means that there is a total deemed dividend of $560,000 to shareholders. If the $1 million had not been subtracted, the deemed dividend would have been only $160,000. Consequently, the paid-up capital after the redemption is nil ($600,000 - 1,000,000 + (560,000 – 160,000)).

(6) Paid-up capital — holding corporation — Where a particular corporation resident in Canada was at any time a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, in computing the paid-up capital at any particular time in respect of a class of shares of the capital stock of the particular corporation,

(a) there shall be deducted the total of all amounts each of which is an amount by which the paid-up capital would, but for this subsection, have increased at or before the particular time as a result of the acquisition of shares of a class of the capital stock of the insurance corporation from the corporation on its demutualization; and

(b) there shall be added the amount, if any, by which

(i) the total of all amounts each of which is deemed by subsection 84(3), (4) or (4.1) to be a dividend on shares of that class paid by the particular corporation before the particular time

exceeds

(ii) the total of all amounts each of which would be deemed by subsection 84(3), (4) or (4.1) to be a dividend on shares of that class paid by the particular corporation before the particular time, if this Act were read without reference to this subsection.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(6) of the Act sets out rules that apply to the determination of the paid-up capital of shares of a particular corporation resident in Canada that has been a holding corporation that acquired shares of an insurance corporation from the insurance corporation on its demutualization.

The rules in subsection 139.1(6) are the same as the rules in subsection 139.1(5), except for the specification of the amount to be deducted from paid-up capital. The amount deducted from the paid-up capital of a class of shares is equal to the total amount by which the paid-up capital of the class would, but for subsection 139.1(6), increase as a result of the holding corporation's acquisition of shares of the insurance corporation on its demutualization.

The reference in subsection 139.1(6) to the acquisition of shares on the demutualization of the insurer is intended to refer only to the initial acquisition of shares as part of the transaction whereby the insurer ceases to be a mutual insurance corporation. This acquisition would not involve the holding corporation paying any consideration to the insurer for the shares. Subsection 139.1(6) is not intended to apply where the holding corporation acquires shares for full consideration payable to the insurer, even though this might occur as part of the same series of transactions as the demutualization.

(7) Policy dividends — Where the payment of a policy dividend by an insurance corporation is a taxable conversion benefit,

(a) for the purposes of this Act other than this section, the policy dividend is deemed not to be a policy dividend; and

(b) no amount in respect of the policy dividend may be included, either explicitly or implicitly, in the calculation of an amount deductible by the insurer for any taxation year under paragraph 20(7)(c) or subsection 138(3).

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(7) of the Act provides that if the payment of a policy dividend is a taxable conversion benefit, the policy dividend is deemed, for the purposes of provisions in the Act (other than section 139.1 itself), not to be a policy dividend. Consequently, the rules in section 148 that apply in respect of policy dividends will not be applicable. Subsection 139.1(7) also provides that the insurer may not include an amount in respect of the policy dividend in computing its deductible reserves. Such policy dividends are generally treated as corporate dividends pursuant to paragraph 139.1(4)(f).

In determining the treatment of policy dividends under section 139.1, several provisions must be considered. Paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b) contain rules for determining whether a conversion benefit consists of an obligation (whether absolute or contingent) of the insurer to make a payment, or the payment itself. Subsection 139.1(7) applies with respect to a policy dividend only if the payment of the dividend is the benefit, i.e., only if paragraph 139.1(2)(b) is applicable. In general, these are dividends that are paid within 13 months after the demutualization. Paragraph 139.1(3)(c) specifies which policy dividends are considered to be paid in connection with a demutualization. Paragraph 139.1(3)(d) splits a policy dividend into two separate dividends where only part of the dividend is paid because of the demutualization. Paragraphs 139.1(3)(e) and (f) clarify the circumstances in which a policy dividend is considered to be paid.

(8) Payment and receipt of premium — Where, in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, a stakeholder receives a specified insurance benefit, the stakeholder is deemed to have paid and the corporation is deemed to have received, at the time of demutualization, a premium in respect of the policy to which the benefit relates equal to the value of the benefit.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(8) of the Act provides that if, in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, a stakeholder receives a taxable conversion benefit that is a specified insurance benefit, the stakeholder is deemed to have paid a premium to the insurer equal to the value of the benefit. The payment date for the premium is the time of demutualization, which is stated by paragraph 139.1(2)(e) to be the time the insurer first issues a share. Pursuant to paragraphs 139.1(2)(d) and (f), the value of the specified insurance benefit is its fair market value at the time of demutualization.

The combined effect of subsection 139.1(8) and paragraph 139.1(4)(f) is to treat the stakeholder and the insurer as if the insurer had paid a corporate dividend to the stakeholder at the time of demutualization, which the stakeholder immediately paid as a premium under an insurance policy.

Under subsection 139.1(1), a "specified insurance benefit" is a taxable conversion benefit provided by the demutualizing insurer that is — the enhancement of benefits under an insurance policy,

— the issuance of an insurance policy,

— the undertaking by the insurer of an obligation to pay a policy dividend, or — a reduction in the premiums payable under an insurance policy.

Paragraphs 139.1(2)(a) and (b) specify when an undertaking to pay a policy dividend constitutes the benefit for purposes of section 139.1 and when the actual payment of the dividend is the benefit. Generally, the undertaking will be the benefit if the dividend is payable more than 13 months after demutualization. A "specified insurance benefit" includes taxable conversion benefits that are undertakings to pay policy dividends. It does not include taxable conversion benefits that consist of the payment of policy dividends.

Related Provisions: 139.1(2)(e) — Determining time of demutualization; 139.1(2)(f) — Value of benefit.

(9) Cost of taxable conversion benefit — Where, in connection with the demutualization of an insurance corporation, a stakeholder receives a taxable conversion benefit (other than a specified insurance benefit), the stakeholder is deemed to have acquired the benefit at a cost equal to the value of the benefit.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(9) of the Act applies where a stakeholder receives a taxable conversion benefit that is not a "specified insurance benefit", as described above. Where this is the case, the stakeholder is deemed to have acquired the benefit at a cost equal to the value of the benefit. Pursuant to paragraph 139.1(2)(f), the value of the benefit is its fair market value at the time the stakeholder is considered to receive the benefit. This time is determined under paragraph 139.1(2)(d).

Related Provisions: 139.1(2)(f) — Value of benefit.

(10) No shareholder benefit — Subsection 15(1) does not apply to a conversion benefit.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(10) of the Act provides that subsection 15(1) does not apply to a conversion benefit. Subsection 15(1) includes in income certain benefits conferred by a corporation on a shareholder or on a person in contemplation of the person becoming a shareholder. The purpose of subsection 139.1(10) is to ensure that the issuance of shares or rights to acquire shares in connection with a demutualization is not treated as a shareholder benefit to which subsection 15(1) applies.

(11) Exclusion of benefit from RRSP and other rules — Subject to subsection (12), for the purposes of the provisions of this Act that relate to registered retirement savings plans, registered retirement income funds, deferred profit sharing plans and superannuation or pension funds or plans, a conversion benefit is deemed not to have been received out of, under or because of, any insurance policy.

Technical Notes: Subsection 139.1(11) applies for the purposes of the rules in the Act relating to RRSPs, RRIFs, DPSPs and superannuation or pension funds or plans. For these purposes, a conversion benefit is deemed not to have been received out of, under or because of any insurance policy.

However, subsection 139.1(11) does not apply in the event that a demutualization benefit is received because of an interest in a life insurance policy, otherwise than by the trust that governs any such fund or plan and holds the interest in the policy. In this case, subsection 139.1(12) provides that the demutualization benefit is received because of the fund or plan and would, as a consequence, be fully included in computing the recipient's income.

Subsection 139.1(11) ensures that:

— where a life insurance policy is registered as an RRSP or a RRIF, a conversion benefit is not taxable as a benefit out of or under the RRSP or RRIF, nor is it considered a benefit or advantage that is conditional on the existence of the RRSP or RRIF;

— where a life insurance policy constitutes a superannuation or pension fund or plan, a conversion benefit is not taxable as a superannuation or pension benefit; and — a conversion benefit will be disregarded for the purpose of the special rules in subsection 198(6) applicable to the acquisition of a life insurance policy by a trust governed by a DPSP or an RRSP.

(12) Retirement benefit — A conversion benefit received because of an interest in a life insurance policy held by a trust governed by a registered retirement savings plan, registered retirement income fund, deferred profit sharing plan or superannuation or pension fund or plan is deemed to be received under the plan or fund, as the case may be, if it is received by any person (other than the trust).

Technical Notes: See under subsec. 139.1(11) above.

Related Provisions: 139.1(4)(f) — Deemed dividend where 139.1(12) does not apply.

(13) Employee-paid insurance — Where

(a) a stakeholder receives a conversion benefit because of the stakeholder's interest in a group insurance policy under which individuals have been insured in the course of or because of their employment,

(b) at all times before the payment of a premium described in paragraph (c), the full cost of a particular insurance coverage under the policy has been borne by the individuals who have been insured under the particular coverage,

(c) the stakeholder pays a premium under the policy in respect of the particular coverage or under another group insurance policy in respect of coverage that has replaced the particular coverage, and

(d) it is reasonable to conclude that the purpose of the premium is to apply, for the benefit of the individuals who are insured under the particular coverage or the replacement coverage, all or part of the value of the portion of the conversion benefit that can reasonably be considered to be in respect of the particular coverage,

the following rules apply:

(e) for the purposes of paragraph 6(1)(f) and regulations made under subsection 6(4), the premium is deemed to be an amount paid by the individuals who are insured under the particular coverage or the replacement coverage, as the case may be, and not to be an amount paid by the stakeholder, and

(f) no amount may be deducted in respect of the premium in computing the stakeholder's income.

Technical Notes: New subsection 139.1(13) of the Act is intended to allow an employer that receives a conversion benefit in respect of a group insurance policy to contribute an amount equal to the value of the conversion benefit to the policy without the contribution being considered an employer contribution. This subsection is applicable with respect to disability and life insurance coverage that is fully employee-funded, and prevents the benefits from becoming taxable by virtue of the contribution.

Specifically, subsection 139.1(13) applies where the following conditions are met:

— a stakeholder receives property as a conversion benefit because of the stakeholder's interest in a group insurance policy under which employees are insured;

— employees have borne the full cost of a particular insurance coverage under the policy;

— the stakeholder pays a premium in respect of the particular insurance coverage; and — it is reasonable to conclude that the stakeholder intended to apply, for the benefit of the insured employees, all or part of the fair market value of the portion of the property that is in respect of the particular insurance coverage.

Where subsection 139.1(13) applies, the premium paid by the stakeholder is deemed to have been paid instead by the insured employees, for the purposes of paragraph 6(1)(f) and regulations made under subsection 6(4). Paragraph 6(1)(f) includes periodic disability payments in income if they are paid under a plan to which the employer has made a contribution. Regulations made under subsection 6(4) specify the amount of the taxable benefit arising from coverage under a group term life insurance policy. There is no taxable benefit if the life insurance is fully paid for by employees.

Subsection 139.1(13) also provides that the stakeholder is not entitled to deduct a premium to which the subsection applies.

Subsection 139.1(13) also applies to a premium paid under a group insurance policy that provides replacement coverage for the particular insurance coverage that gave rise to the conversion benefit. This rule is intended to accommodate the situation where a new group insurance policy has been entered into, most likely with a different insurer, before the conversion benefit is paid.

Where more than one coverage is provided under a group insurance policy — for example, long term disability and medical and dental benefits — subsection 139.1(13) requires a determination of the extent to which a conversion benefit is attributable to a particular employee-funded coverage. Information for this purpose should be obtained from the insurer.

(14) Acquisition of control — For the purposes of subsections 10(10), 13(21.2) and (24), 14(12) and 18(15), sections 18.1 and 37, subsection 40(3.4), the definition "superficial loss" in section 54, section 55, subsections 66(11), (11.4) and (11.5), 66.5(3) and

66.7(10) and (11), section 80, paragraph 80.04(4)(h), subsections 85(1.2) and 88(1.1) and (1.2), sections 111 and 127, subsection 249(4) and subsection 256(7), control of an insurance corporation (and each corporation controlled by it) is deemed not to be acquired solely because of the acquisition of shares of the capital stock of the insurance corporation, in connection with the demutualization of the insurance corporation, by a particular corporation that at a particular time becomes a holding corporation in connection with the demutualization where, immediately after the particular time

(a) the particular corporation is not controlled by any person or group of persons, and

(b) the total of the cash of the particular corporation and the fair market value of shares of the capital stock of the insurance corporation held by the particular corporation is not less than 95% of the fair market value of all the assets of the particular corporation.

Technical Notes: Subsection 256(7) of the Act sets out rules for determining whether there has been an acquisition of control for the purposes of certain provisions of the Act. In the case of a demutualization of an insurance corporation where policyholders are issued shares for their ownership rights in the corporation, there would be no acquisition of control expected for the purposes of these provisions because of paragraph 256(7)(a) and subsection 256(8.1).

New subsection 139.1(14) provides that, where demutualization of an insurance corporation is effected through the creation of a holding corporation, the acquisition of shares by the holding corporation will similarly not result in an acquisition of control for the purposes of these provisions. More specifically, there will be no acquisition of control because of an acquisition of shares of the insurance corporation by a particular corporation, in connection with the demutualization of the insurance corporation, where immediately after the time that the particular corporation becomes a holding corporation — the particular corporation is not controlled by any person or group of persons, and — the total of the "cash" of the particular corporation and the fair market value of the shares of the capital stock of the insurance corporation is not less than 95% of the fair market value of all the assets of the particular corporation.

Subsection 139.1(14) is modelled on a similar rule in paragraph 256(7)(e), but is adapted to apply to the anticipated circumstances where a holding corporation is used in connection with a demutualization.

For the purpose of subsection 139.1(14), the "cash" of a corporation is defined in subsection 139.1(1) as ordinary money (including foreign currency), specified deposits of such money and specified government-backed securities.

Mutual Holding Corporations

139.2 Where at any time a mutual holding corporation (as defined by subsection 139.1(1)) in respect of an insurance corporation distributes property to a policyholder of the insurance corporation, the mutual holding corporation is deemed to have paid, and the policyholder is deemed to have received from the mutual holding corporation, at that time a dividend on shares of the capital stock of the mutual holding corporation, equal to the fair market value of the property.

Technical Notes: New section 139.2 of the Act sets out the tax treatment of distributions made by a mutual holding corporation, as defined by subsection 139.1(1).

Section 139.2 applies where a mutual holding corporation for an insurance corporation distributes property to policyholders of the insurance corporation. The section provides that the corporation is considered to have paid, and each policyholder is considered to have received, a dividend on shares of the capital stock of the mutual holding corporation. The amount of the dividend received by a policyholder is equal to the fair market value of the property distributed to the policyholder. The most common application of section 139.2 will be with respect to the distribution by a mutual holding corporation of dividends received on shares of the insurance corporation.

Application: The December 15, 1998 draft legislation (demutualization of insurance companies), s. 4, will add ss. 139.1 and 139.2, applicable to transactions that occur after December 15, 1998.

141. Life insurance corporation deemed to be public corporation — Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a life insurance corporation that is resident in Canada shall be deemed to be a public corporation.

Proposed Amendment — 141

141. (1) Definitions — In this section, "demutualization" and "holding corporation" have the meanings assigned by subsection 139.1(1).

(2) Life insurance corporation deemed to be public corporation — Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, a life insurance corporation that is resident in Canada is deemed to be a public corporation.

(3) Holding corporation deemed to be public corporation — A corporation resident in Canada that is a holding corporation because of its acquisition of shares in connection with the demutualization of a life insurance corporation resident in Canada is deemed to be a public corporation at each time in the specified period of the holding corporation at which the holding corporation would have satisfied conditions prescribed under subparagraph (b)(i) of the definition "public corporation" in subsection 89(1) if the words "shareholders, the dispersal of ownership of its shares and the public trading of its shares" in that subparagraph were read as "shareholders and the dispersal of ownership of its shares".

Related Provisions: 141(4) — Meaning of "specified period"; 141(5) — Shares of holding corporation deemed not to be taxable Canadian property.

(4) Specified period — For the purpose of subsection (3), the specified period of a corporation

(a) begins at the time the corporation becomes a holding corporation; and

(b) ends at the first time the corporation is a public corporation because of any provision of this Act other than subsection (3).

(5) Exclusion from taxable Canadian property — For the purpose of subparagraph 115(1)(b)(iv), a share of the capital stock of a corporation is deemed to be listed at any time on a stock exchange prescribed for the purpose of that subparagraph where

(a) the corporation is

(i) a life insurance corporation resident in Canada that has demutualized and that, at that time, would have satisfied conditions prescribed under subparagraph (b)(i) of the definition "public corporation" in subsection 89(1) if the words "shareholders, the dispersal of ownership of its shares and the public trading of its shares" in that subparagraph were read as "shareholders and the dispersal of ownership of its shares", or

(ii) a holding corporation that is deemed by subsection (3) to be a public corporation at that time;

(b) no share of the capital stock of the corporation is listed on any stock exchange at that time; and

(c) that time is no later than six months after the time of demutualization of

(i) the corporation, where the corporation is a life insurance corporation, and

(ii) in any other case, the life insurance corporation in respect of which the corporation is a holding corporation.

Application: The December 15, 1998 draft legislation (demutualization of insurance companies), s. 6, will amend s. 141 to read as above, applicable after December 15, 1998.

Technical Notes: Section 141 of the Act provides that a life insurance corporation resident in Canada is deemed to be a public corporation. This provision is renumbered as subsection 141(2) and new provisions are added that apply where an insurance corporation has demutualized. These amendments apply after December 15, 1998.

New subsection 141(1) of the Act defines "demutualization" and "holding corporation" for the purposes of section 141. Those expressions have the meanings given to them by new subsection 139.1(1).

New subsection 141(3) of the Act applies to a corporation resident in Canada that is a holding corporation in respect of an insurance corporation that has demutualized. It deems the holding corporation to be a public corporation at a particular time if the corporation has a class of shares that meets the conditions relating to the number of shareholders and the dispersal of ownership referred to in paragraphs 4800(1)(b) and (c) of the Income Tax Regulations. In this context, the reference to "that class" in those paragraphs intended to refer to any particular class of the capital stock of the corporation (whether or not that class is qualified for distribution to the public). "Holding corporation" is defined in subsection 139.1(1).

Normally, a corporation that does not have any shares listed on a Canadian stock exchange cannot become a public corporation unless a class of its shares is qualified for distribution to the public. Subsection 141(3) eliminates this condition for a holding corporation and it also eliminates the need to make an election to be a public corporation.

Subsection 141(3) applies only during the period specified in new subsection 141(4). The specified period for a corporation starts when it became a holding corporation, and ends when it becomes a public corporation because of any other provision of the Act.

New subsection 141(5) of the Act contains a rule that is generally intended, for a temporary period pending the anticipated listing of shares of a resident insurance corporation or its holding corporation on a prescribed stock exchange, to exclude shares issued by those corporations from taxable Canadian property. Consequently, a non-resident shareholder's gain from disposing of such shares will not be taxable in Canada, even though the shares are not listed on a prescribed stock exchange at the time of the disposition.

Subsection 141(5) applies for the purpose of subparagraph 115(1)(b)(iv), which provides that a share of a corporation resident in Canada (other than a mutual fund corporation) is taxable Canadian property unless the share is listed on a prescribed stock exchange. Subsection 141(5) deems certain shares to be listed on a prescribed stock exchange.

More specifically, subsection 141(5) applies to a class of shares of an insurance corporation that has demutualized if the corporation has a class of shares that meets the conditions relating to the number of shareholders and the dispersal of ownership referred to in paragraphs 4800(1)(b) and (c) of the Regulations. In this context, the reference to "that class" in those paragraphs intended to refer to any particular class of the capital stock of the corporation (whether or not that class is qualified for distribution to the public). The subsection also applies to the shares of a holding corporation in respect of the insurance corporation if the holding corporation is deemed by new subsection 141(3) to be a public corporation.

Subsection 141(5) applies for a maximum of 6 months after a demutualization occurs. It does not apply to the shares of a corporation at a time when any shares of the corporation are listed on a stock exchange.
